For the committee on good of the club J. F. Klimmer suggested that the club's annual carnation show is due in February and it was decided to have the exhibition on the regular meeting night, February 14, opening at 7 p. m. E. F. Winterson, P. C. Schupp and Leonard Kill were appointed to take charge of the show and were instructed to invite all local growers to stage their best and all raisers of novelties to send exhibits. Mr. Klimmer also suggested that section foremen for all the local growers be urged to put in writing, briefly, their views as to the merits and faults of the varieties they now are growing. It was considered a fine idea and adopted.

George Asmus brought up the matter of the date of the election and Leonard Kill moved the date be changed. It requires an amendment in the by-laws and a resolution placing the election in January was laid over under the rules.

The trustees were authorized to renew the lease on the present club room, two nights a month, to May, 1908, if no better arrangement can be made. The room is used only one night a month.

Professor Hasselbring, secretary of the Illinois State Florists' Association, called attention to the convention at Bloomington next month.

J. Hamlin, of Geneva, Ill., was given a vote of thanks for an exhibit of hothouse tomatoes.

Adjournment was at 9:30.

The Season's Biggest Range.

While George Reinberg has not as yet announced his plans for building this season, it is reported that he is placing orders for material for eight houses, each 27x300. This is covering a ground area of 65,000 square feet, or approximately an acre and a half. Greenhouse builders say this is likely to be the largest range erected for the Chicago market this season, though one of the privileges as inalienable as the right to change prices without notice is any big grower's right to reconsider his decision expressed in, "I guess I'll take a rest, and not build this year." Consequently other announcements are likely at any time.

Grafted Roses.

Growers for the Chicago market more and more are resorting to the grafting of their Brides and Maids, a practice which heretofore has been much more common among the leading growers in the big eastern centers. Bassett & Washburn were leaders in the use of grafted stock, but others have been making tests of results which have satisfied them that the extra trouble of preparing young stock is worth while. J. A. Budlong grafted a large part of the stock benched this season, and so did George Reinberg. Both are satisfied. Peter Reinberg has been grafting a few thousand of Brides, Maids, Liberty, etc., each season for several years and is so well pleased that now he has 60,000 Manetti stocks potted for use in the next few weeks.

Various Notes.

The Chicago delegation to Toronto will travel via the Wabash and Canadian Pacific, leaving here at 3 p. m. Tuesday. The train reaches Detroit, where it will pick up the delegation from that city at 10:40 Tuesday evening, arriving at Toronto at 7:15 a. m. The florists will have a special car. The route is a fare and a third on the certificate plan. Berths will be reserved on application to P. J. Hauswirth or George Asmus. Eight or ten, at least, will go.

P. J. Hauswirth has returned from his trip to New York and Boston. He will have some interesting reports to make at the next club meeting.

Bassett & Washburn will exhibit their seedling carnation, No. 20, at the Toronto convention.

E. H. Hunt reports sending considerable quantities of the Carlson aster seed to states as distant as Massachusetts.

John Sterrett is now with Zech & Mann, succeeding Mons Olson.

C. W. McKellar reports an excellent demand for gardenias. The stock is much improved in quality since Christmas, the stems being twice as long.

The trade will be pleased to learn that Andrew McAdams is much improved in health.

The box manufacturers have advanced the prices of such shipping cases as florists use about fifteen per cent.

Fred Sperry, of Vaughan & Sperry, reports that last Sunday a sneak-thief stole the chicken prepared for the family's Sunday dinner.

A. J. Greaves, of Bloomington, was one of the week's visitors. The Bloomington people are anticipating a good attendance at the annual meeting of the State Florists' Association next month.

J. H. Grohosky, who was with E. H. Hunt during the holiday rush, is now with Henry Koropp.

Robert Schenck, who has been located at Pittsburg and Youngstown for the last two or three years, is again in Chicago.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is cutting fine rubrum lilies from cold storage bulbs. They are quite a novelty in this market at this season.

Henry Payne, the Hinsdale grower, is also an expert amateur photographer.

The adjourned meeting of the Horticultural Society of Chicago was held at the Auditorium Annex yesterday afternoon.

Wietor Bros. have a number of excellent seedling carnations. A red is particularly good and will be planted in considerable quantity next season. If it lives up to its present promise it may be distributed. There also is a pink, a trifle darker than Lawson, which may find its way on the market.

The employees of the Wienhoeber Co. announce their first informal reception at the Svithiod club house, 1768 Wrightwood avenue, Wednesday evening, January 30. The committee consists of V. Bergman, W. W. Adams, D. A. Robertson and F. Pisternick. Goldsmith's orchestra has been engaged.

The Poehlmann Bros. Co. has named its deeper pink sport of Chatenay, calling it Morton Grove, and will disseminate it in 1908. It won the silver cup for best rose never before exhibited, at the last Chicago show. The Poehlmann Co. has a number of other new sorts that are well thought of.

A big crop of roses which has been held back by sunless skies promises to make the latter half of January show up well for Sinner Bros.

W. L. Kroeschell and Charles Kroeschell were among the employers at the labor conference at the residence of Mrs. Potter Palmer last Saturday evening.

The A. L. Randall Co. is expecting yellow tulips and white lilac every day now. Emil Buettner is still cutting some splendid Brides and Maids.

J. S Dekema, of Jensen & Dekema, has gone to California for his health.

The Foley Mfg. Co. reports that it will be March 15 before the new factory is fully ready. J. P. Foley says 1906 showed a satisfactory increase over 1905, but nothing compared to what they will be able to do in 1907 with the new facilities.

W. H. Hilton is planning a trip to the Pacific coast.

The Dallas News, in a write-up of Col. Green's greenhouses, says it will not be long before Texas will be shipping Beauties to the Chicago market, instead of Chicago supplying Texas, as in the past.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The weather has been warm, with little sun. Stock has been abundant, especially carnations and violets. There is about the usual activity in funeral work and some good decorations have been put up for balls, but otherwise business is considered dull. Shipping trade also has slacked up; still some say it is good certain days.

There were quite a lot of fancy Beauties which did not bring over $3 per dozen last week. Other fancy roses are scarce. Plenty of other grades are to be had. Carnations are in heavy supply, with values shrinking almost every day. Violets are not so much a glut as they were; still enough coming in to fully supply the demand. There is an oversupply of bulbous stock and prices have gone down on all kinds. There are plenty of greens.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held an interesting and largely attended meeting January 10 in the new room in the Burlington building, which is fitted up with every convenience. Chairman Frank Weber, of the flower show committee, being out of the city, the secretary read the report showing that only $2,540 had been subscribed to the guarantee fund. A motion was made to discontinue the flower show, as the $10,000 guarantee fund had not been subscribed. This was ruled out of order by the president, as the time set is for the February meeting.

Applications for membership were received from Pierre Schneider and Henry Niemeyer, both growers in Kirkwood. The meeting February 14 will be known as "Carnation Meeting" and $50 in prizes will be offered, the trustees to have full charge of the exhibition.

Swan Peterson, of Gibson City, Ill., had on exhibition his seedling white carnation, No. 127. The judges, Messrs. Emil Schray, J. F. Ammann and A. Jablonsky, awarded it eighty-five points, also saying that they find it apparently a good commercial variety.

The question, "Do Flower Shows Help the Retail Business?" was answered by several of our leading storemen. It surely does help the trade in all branches.

his eastern trip and reports a good time. He is chairman of the committee to raise the $10,000 guarantee fund for the flower show and says he will call his committee together this week and map out work to complete the fund if possible by the February meeting of the club, which is the time limit.

Fire started early Saturday morning in the second story of the building occupied by C. A. Kuehn. The damage was only in the wire shop. The lower floor, where supplies are kept, was not damaged and business not interrupted. The loss amounts to about $500. Insured.

Alice Ellison, daughter of William Ellison, of the Ellison Floral Co., was married last week to Harry Wardy, of Grand Rapids, Mich. The couple will make their home in Chicago.

Fred Ammann, of Edwardsville; Henry Johann, of Collinsville; Swan Peterson, of Gibson City, and A. F. Longren, of Joliet, Ill., were visitors last week and attended the club meeting Thursday afternoon.

President Roosevelt has ordered the United States coal testing plant in Forest park to be removed to the Jamestown Exposition. This will be a great relief to the trees in the park.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The Tarrytown Horticultural Society's eighth annual dinner was, as usual, a popular success. The attendance was up to the average, the large dining-room being completely filled. Many letters of regret were read from prominent horticulturists unable to attend. The dinner itself was an inspiration. The tables were decorated with Winsor carnations by the F. R. Pierson Co. The festivities lasted until nearly midnight. W. H. H. Ely, editor of the Press-Record, was the toastmaster of the evening, witty, eloquent and a master of his art.

The first toast was "The Future of Horticulture as Viewed by the Horticultural Press," responded to by J. Austin Shaw. J. Addison Young, of New Rochelle, gave an interesting address with many amusing stories. Charles Tibbets, of White Plains, discoursed upon "The Necessity of Public Parks." Editor Raymond had for his subject, "Peerless Tarrytown and What the Local Press Can Accomplish for Horticulture." He is the "old man eloquent." Frank P. Millard talked on "Horticulture in Our Public Schools." Other speakers were Jas. I. Donlan, A. H. Brown and James Scott.

W. G. Saltford, of Poughkeepsie, exhibited his new carnation, a cross between Lawson and Propriety, a beautiful pink of immense depth and size averaging four inches in diameter. Mr. Saltford will exhibit it at Toronto.

Howard Nichols is president of the society, which is in a most healthful condition and growing rapidly. The attendance from New York was lighter than usual.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Conditions have slightly improved despite the extraordinarily unfavorable weather. Nearly all the crops of roses and carnations are more or less off now, and with anything like good demand we should have a decided scarcity of staple varieties in these flowers. While the demand is improving it cannot yet be called good. Indications point, however, to greater activity during the next fortnight. Roses have slightly advanced in price, the ball at Horticultural hall last Friday, at which great quantities of all grades of Beauties were used, starting the upward movement. This is chiefly noted on the lower grades. It is interesting to note, by the way, that all the Beauties required on Friday were locally grown, whereas at this time last year we were obliged to draw on New York for Beauties for a similar occasion. Violets are still in rather poor demand, prices being weak and irregular. Sweet peas, owing to the shortage of carnation plants last fall, are more abundant than ever before at midwinter in this market. The demand consumes all the good flowers at excellent prices. Lælias are practically over, but there are plenty of good cattleyas, the lavender being reinforced by white. White lilacs are fairly abundant. They are greatly prized for their decorative effect. Mignonette of fine grade is abundant. Fancy freesia has arrived in sufficient quantities to be quoted. It is a welcome addition. Greens are quite scarce, the smallness of the plumosus bunches being sufficient evidence. A few tulips have made their appearance, La Reine being the variety.

The Century Flower Shop.

Several years ago there was a sign in the buying room of 112 South Twelfth street to the effect that "Whatsoever thou nearest in thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not repeat." I do not know whether this sign still hangs there, but I have often thought of it, and wondered whether it is really a Bible quotation or only invented to sound like one, something in the way that Benjamin Franklin fooled his many friends by reading an additional chapter of Genesis, which they all admitted they had never heard before. Some better Biblical student than I am will have to solve this point, but the fact remains that that sign has always made me specially careful with regard to the merest trifle that I might hear at 112 South Twelfth street. There are, however, some potent truths with regard to the running of the Century Flower Shop that even the blindest of us may see from outside, and which therefore can be repeated without danger of betraying confidence. These truths are decidedly worth repeating, because they show the effect of modern business methods on a modern flower shop.

Take, for example, the second week before Christmas. Then the Century displayed immortelle balls, at tempting prices, dainty vases, with some choice spray or other, the price for the whole being extremely reasonable; and other things to tempt the bargain-hunting buyer. A week later, all these things were sold, every vestige of them cleared away, and in their place were plants sold only from sample, hampers and more expensive Christmas novelties, to tempt the busy shopper. Cut flowers were sold at varying prices, but in every case it was distinctly stated that the contents of the boxes would not be guaranteed; that is, pansies, violets, sweet peas, or whatever the market would afford, at reasonable prices, would be used. If the buyer wanted two dozen carnations, or one dozen Maids, he was politely sent to No. 108, where the choicest cut flowers were sold in quantities to suit every purchaser. The fundamental idea of the Century Flower Shop has always been to establish a mart. This idea is modified only at the holidays, when the selling from sample and certain other improvements are used to increase the effective force of the workers.

A Propagating Secret.

It is generally recognized that among florists of today there are no secrets; that is, no houses kept under lock and key, or methods of culture guarded from publicity with Masonic-like fidelity. The only exception to this rule is in the propagation of certain kinds of plants, in which case a grower, who, after much difficulty, has learned the secret of perpetuating economically, certain species of plants, feels that for the present, at least, he must keep that secret to himself. One of these secrets is the propagation of Adiantum hybridum, discovered some years ago by the late John H. Ley, of Anacostia, D. C. This method, which was shown me recently by Robert Craig, was accidentally discovered by Mr. Ley. It consists in removing about one-third of the bottom of a plant, that is, we will suppose, in a 6-inch pot, and placing this mass of roots in sphagnum moss, with a little bottom heat. The examples shown by Mr. Craig were most interesting, a full grown piece of these roots resembling a pan of seedlings, the crown of each being perfect and the whole lot evenly developed. It is said they are as easily divided as seedlings and start readily when potted off. This method will render Adiantum hybridum as easy a proposition as it has been difficult in the past.

Various Notes.

The Leo Niessen Co. will remove to its new building at 1209 Arch street about February 1.

The second meeting of the general committee in charge of the S. A. F. convention to be held here next August was held on Tuesday evening, January 16. Charles D. Ball was chairman, Edwin Lonsdale secretary and J. William Colflesh treasurer.

Prof. Henry Skinner gave an illustrated lecture last Tuesday evening before the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society on "Where Insects Live During the Winter." Prof. Skinner is the society's entomologist. Let us hope that all florists require information on this subject.

The Philadelphia Cut Flower Co. has been receiving some exceptionally choice Enchantress, which I was enabled to see through the courtesy of W. J. Muth. Unfortunately, it is not the company's policy to give out the names of growers, but as Phil happened to know, he took off his hat in the spirit.

REVIEW readers may recall that the night after the fire at Jacob Becker's, a few weeks ago, an automobile was switched by a pile of dirt on the street into his showhouse. The autoist promptly sued for damages to his expensive machine. TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during the last week has been quite up to the average, and Toronto florists are quite willing to take it easy after the rushing business that was done at Christmas. This year the retail men were up against a hard proposition at Christmas in delivering plants, which, it might be remarked, sold extremely well this season. Some of our retail men say that they have had quite a few to replace; but from the volume of business they are not complaining about having to make good a few plants, especially as the price they obtained left a good margin.

Convention Preparations.

At present the Toronto florists are talking and working for the coming convention of the American Carnation Society, which is to be held here January 23 and 24. The exhibition and convention will be held in the City hall, and all arrangements have been completed with the customs department to allow all goods bearing tags and labels, furnished by Secretary Herr, to be delivered to the City hall immediately, without going through the usual channels of red tape the customs require. This is a very important item, as exhibits can now be rushed from the station direct to the exhibition hall. Arrangements have been made with the express company to have wagons waiting for the trains. It looks as if nothing had been left undone to insure the speedy delivery of exhibits from the United States.

The reception and banquet committees have been busy completing arrangements for entertaining the visiting delegates, and it is the intention to hold a large banquet on the night of January 24, at the King Edward's hotel. The ladies are invited.

The enthusiasm displayed by the Canadian florists, and especially the Toronto men, is quite marked, and Mr. Dunlop, the president, is receiving the hearty coöperation of all connected with the trade, to make the Toronto convention one of the best, if not the best, in the history of the association. The Canadian florists feel that it is quite an honor to have the American association come to Toronto, and it is up to them to make the convention a success, and, if present indications can be taken as any guide, it will not be for lack of enthusiasm of the Canadian trade if it is not a success.

Members should not forget to get a certificate from the station agent when they purchase tickets, so as to get the one-third fare return. Purchase a first-class single trip ticket to Toronto and ask for a certificate, not a receipt.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business last week was no more than could be expected. The weather conditions hampered it somewhat and the entire week was disagreeable and not much sunshine. Blooms of all kinds were short, but enough to supply the demand and commanded fairly good prices. A large amount of funeral work was disposed of.

Considering the cloudy weather carnations are doing well, yet there are thousands of healthy buds waiting for the sunshine, when the usual supply will again be on the market. Violets are again plentiful and bringing their regular price. Roses are scarce, due to the want of bright, clear weather. Paper

White narcissi and Romans are plentiful and bring good prices. Lilies of the valley are extra fine; freesias are drifting in slowly. Calla lilies will be short this year.

Greens of all kinds are enough to meet the demands. Decorative plants of all kinds are easily disposed of as there is an unusual demand at this time of the year.

Club Meeting.

The regular meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club was held January 14 in the new hall over the new Baltimore Florists' Exchange building, with President W. G. Lehr in the chair. W. Kennedy and C. Seigwart were elected to membership. C. Feast, Adam Roop and J. J. Cummings were proposed for membership. After adjournment the members marched down stairs into the large salesroom of the exchange and a banquet followed. About seventy-five plates were awaiting the guests. R. M. Kemp was presented with a pair of gold link cuff buttons. R. L. Graham made the presentation speech, after which Mr. Kemp responded. There was also a smoker given by the club. The first meeting in February will be ladies night. Refreshments will be served.

Various Notes.

The annual meeting of the board of directors of the Baltimore Florists' Exchange was held in the new building Monday, January 14. The following were elected: President, E. A. Seidewitz; vice-president, F. C. Bauer; secretary, E. Akehurst; treasurer, W. Lehr; directors, I. H. Moss, E. A. Rider and William Feast.

J. J. Cummings, manager for St. Mary's Industrial School greenhouses, has erected a fine new office in one of the houses.

A. Stoll, Carroll, Md., is disposing of a large amount of funeral designs.

E. Holden has 2,300 Boston Market lettuce plants coming on.

B. Stoll, of Brooklyn, is erecting a new house, 20x50, for vegetable plants.

W. Teipe, gardener for Nathaniel James, is cutting some fine Enchantress carnations.

Fred Reitz, Franklintown, was in town looking for a second-hand boiler. J. L. T.

CLEVELAND.

On January 28 the Cleveland Florists' Exchange will open a wholesale commission house and growers' market with one of the finest equipped stores of the kind in the country, at 606 Huron road. Besides representing the growers of this locality they will carry a full line of florists' supplies. George W. Smith, who the past summer disposed of his growing and retail business, will have full charge of this new venture, which should be a decided success.

The REVIEW would like to hear from some young man whose position is such that he meets all the trade in Cleveland and who has a "nose for news." To one who has an aptitude for newspaper work we can offer a connection which we hope will be both pleasant and profitable.—Ed.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

The demand last week was rather light. Roses are scarce and it was next to impossible to get select, home-grown stock. The most of the roses that are brought in can only be termed as good medium stock. Killarney is off crop and Bridesmaid is about the best on the market in pink roses. Bride is about equal to the demand, also Richmond. Some very fine Beauties are carried by the larger concerns and retail at $10 per dozen. Carnations are good, especially Enchantress and Craig. It is noticeable that a large number are split. Miscellaneous stock, such as Paper Whites, Romans, etc., is plentiful. A small number of tulips are on the market, but only one dealer seems to be able to handle them profitably. Some nice white lilac is offered at a stiff price.

St. Paul.

The Ramaley Floral Co. intends selling out, with the object of entering the business in a wholesale way. There is no doubt but that the growers would like to have a place to bring their stock to; it would save them considerable time and would, at the same time, be a great help to the retailers. The basement of their present location could not be improved upon for the above purpose, it being centrally located.

Adolph Bagdahl, formerly with the Fleishman Floral Co., New York, and later with the Wheeling Greenhouse Co., of Wheeling W. Va., is now doing the designing for L. L. May & Co. Owing to the heavy increase in trade this firm found it necessary to add to the force. His initial design was a 24-inch violet pillow, which was made of solid violets with a loose effect and which was favorably commented on. J. W. Hoffman, who has charge of the retail department, says that city trade is exceptionally heavy.

H. E. Philpott, manager of the Chicago Floral Co., Winnipeg, spent a day in St. Paul on his return from the south and east. He reports business good in Winnipeg, but a hard place to supply good stock. The output of home-grown stock is light and the demand heavy.

August S. Swanson is cutting some nice white lilac. The demand for it is good and it brings a good price. For rarities it is hard to beat Mr. Swanson.

Chris Bussjaeger continues to make improvements in his plant, the last being an alarm system, which works well and has so far proved satisfactory. A number of growers have of late installed recording thermometers and thermostats.

Minneapolis.

Rice Bros. report a good business. Of late they have had some very good stock, especially in roses, and undoubtedly helped the retailers out to a large extent.

Donaldson's have been turning out a great many designs of late. People are not only buying cut flowers at the department stores, but are also ordering funeral designs.

Geo. Murtfeldt reports trade as being fair, but reports difficulty in getting good stock. FELIX.

KENOSHA, WIS.—W. H. Drake has taken his son-in-law into partnership and the firm name now is W. H. Drake & Co. Another house will be added in the spring.

THE REVIEW is everything one could desire. One would think it could not possibly be improved, still it does seem better every year. — THOS. WAGSTAFF, Lake Forest, Ill.

LARNED, KAN.—Tyra Montgomery says there is a splendid opening here for an energetic man with some capital and who knows how to do it, to build greenhouses and grow cut flowers and plants. Citizens would encourage the enterprise.

The Market.

Business is good and all stock remains well cleaned up excepting some poorer grades of violets. All grades of roses move rapidly. Pink stock is quite scarce. Prices range from $5 to $14 per hundred. Many orchids are being used in funeral work. Carnations are arriving in fairly large quantities, but remain well cleaned up. About one-third of the carnations are Enchantress, and these are mostly of excellent quality and sell readily. Many Paper White narcissi are used. Romans are too high-priced to be used freely, although many are seen. Sweet peas sell well at $1 and $1.50 per hundred. Cold storage lilies, valley, callas, daffodils, etc., sell fast; in fact, any good flower sells. Single and the smaller double violets bring from 50 cents to 75 cents, while the eastern ones bring $1.50 per hundred.

Floriculture in the South.

The most striking example of the unusual boom in the growing of cut flowers in the south is the success made by Col. E. H. R. Green. Colonel Green has engaged successfully in the railroad business, in baseball, in chicken raising, politics and automobiling, but he declares that none of these diversions pay so large a return on the investment as does the flower business.

The Green Floral Co. started in business at Terrell five years ago. Ready sale of stock indicated a lucrative business if handled properly. Two years ago Terrell was outgrown and Colonel Green entered in the wholesale business at Dallas.

Three miles south of the city he has the largest and most complete system of greenhouses south of Chicago. A large force of workmen are now building additional greenhouses. Colonel Green has twenty-seven acres devoted to the business and several acres are under glass. The plant is heated by steam.

"We have been overwhelmed with orders since we first began to put our stock on the market," said Colonel Green. "We have been gradually increasing our output, yet we are getting still further behind the demand. It is estimated that Texas does a flower business valued at about $400,000 a year. In a few years there will be no limit to the great demand and the output will compare with the other big cities."

The following expressions were given by the local florists:

John R. Lomas: "From present prospects and the rate of increase in our business for the year 1906 I regard the future as holding out much encouragement to the florists of this city. I can safely say that 1906 was at least fifty per cent better than 1905. Present conditions are in every respect satisfactory."

Henry Holtkamp: "With the florists of Dallas this has been a very successful season. For my own business, I am safe in saying it has been double that of the preceding year. A large part of this has been in cut flowers. The increase pertains to both city and shipping. Good as the trade has been, it promises to be considerably better for the next year. Dallas is the center for the flower trade. Such has been the demand for flowers that we have enlarged our plant to a great extent during the season and shall have to make even more provision. At certain times the purchases of flowers I have had to make from other dealers in and out of the city have gone as high as $400 and $500 a month. Eventually we shall hope to produce all of the needed flowers at home. The importations now are largely special orders. I estimate my business at not less than $1,000 a month. There has been a great increase in late years for shrubbery and trees. This means that people are paying great attention to landscape gardening."

W. P. Hiegert: "My trade is largely in the city and it has increased at least twenty-five per cent in the last year. The increase in trade has been all around, applying to both the cut flowers and to the plant trade. So great has been the demand that I have had to acquire additional land for the expansion of the greenhouses. As a rule the prices in Dallas have been reasonable, in comparison with other cities of like size and climate. More and more Dallas is becoming a distributing point for flowers and all of the southwest is sending in orders. My business for the year reached not less than $10,000."

Ernest Nitsche: "I started in business in Dallas fifteen years ago and have built up a large plant and flower trade. I fill orders from all over the state. In addition to the output of my greenhouse I purchase in large wholesale lots, in order to supply a rapidly growing trade. The holiday business was so much larger than anticipated that I ran short. The outlook for the coming year is the brightest in the history of the flower trade in Texas."

Otto Lang: "I started business eight years ago, with a cash capital of $17. This year I have done a business of $25,000. I grow nearly everything and ship all over Texas, Indian Territory and Oklahoma, to New Mexico and Arkansas and Louisiana. I buy many cut flowers in Chicago. The trade for this year has more than doubled that of last."

The Dallas Floral Co. has been in existence fifteen years. It has grown, and the year just closing has been its best, the volume of business having been twice as large as last year.

Seth Miller: "The industry has grown wonderfully in this city, the increase for the present being over fifty per cent over last year, which was itself an increase of about the same over the year before. The demand for cut flowers this season has been greater than the supply, nor is there at present one-fourth of the amount of glass needed."

SMILAX.

A few years ago we rarely saw smilax well done in England, but in America it has been one of the most popular foliage subjects for many years, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser; and now we get it well-grown in England, and it has almost entirely superseded the climbing fern, Lygodium Japonicum, or scandens as it was known. The fern is more elegant when quite fresh, but the smilax lasts much better.

I have visited several nurseries where it is now extensively grown, and I find the growers find no difficulty in doing it well. The chief point is to give it plenty of rootroom with loose, rough soil consisting chiefly of leaf-mold and stable manure that has been laid up for some time. There is nothing better than old hotbed manure. Most growers use long, rather narrow boxes, and run the strings up to the roof, giving sufficient room between each two rows of boxes to get through for keeping it in order and for cutting. Planted in cold ground it does no good, but kept above the surface in light compost as described above, it will grow freely. Red spider is its chief enemy among insect pests, but as the syringe or hose may be used freely, this can always be kept in check. There is a great advantage in growing sufficient to fill a house, or at least the center portion, so that it can have the moist humid treatment, and while in regard to water at the roots, stagnation is fatal, yet with good drainage there is not much risk of over-watering.

I find there is some confusion in regard to the proper name. The most generally accepted name is Myrsophyllum asparagoides, but it is also known as Mediola asparagoides. The seed is procurable from the Continent, and after being soaked in water for a short time germinates freely.

Vegetable Forcing.

Please send the Review the names of those in your vicinity who grow vegetables under glass.

One of the effects of the dark weather in November and December has been that vegetable crops have not progressed as usual. Chicago growers say radishes, for instance, are taking nearly double the usual time to mature.

The object of the Massachusetts Asparagus Growers' Association is the restoration of asparagus to its immunity from rust, or the discovery of a species that shall be rust-resistant, and the dissemination of information in relation to its growing and marketing.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—Cucumbers, $1 to $2 doz.; lettuce, 30c to 35c case; radishes, 50c to 65c doz. bunches; tomatoes, 30c to 35c lb.

Boston, Jan. 14.—Supplies are abundant, owing to continued mild weather. Trade would be benefited by colder weather. Lettuce, 15c to 75c doz. heads; cucumbers, $3 to $13 box; parsley, $1.25 box; radishes, $1 to $1.50 box; mint, 75c doz.; romaine, $1 doz.; mushrooms, 50c to $1 lb.

New York, Jan. 14.—Cucumbers continue plenty, dull and weak. Mushrooms are selling up closely and prices firm for choice to fancy qualities; some extra lots exceed our top quotations. Fancy lettuce would command top figures, but we see scarcely any such, and for poorer lots there is little demand. Other kinds of hothouse vegetables are generally steady at unchanged prices. Cucumbers, 50c to $1 doz.; lettuce, 25c to $1 doz. heads; mushrooms, 20c to 75c lb.; mint, 50c to $1 doz. bunches; radishes, $2.50 to $3.50 per 100 bunches; rhubarb, 75c to 80c large bunch; parsley, 15c doz. bunches; tomatoes, 10c to 30c lb.

TOMATOES.

What is the best tomato for early spring forcing and what is the best time to sow the seed for fruit, say, March 15? How far apart should plants be to give best results? How much fruit would be a fair estimate per plant? T. C. G.

Both Sterling Castle and Lorillard are good varieties, easy doers and reliable setters. Sowing seed now you would not be able to get fruit by March 15. You can't count on getting fruit in less than three months and, even then, your plants won't be in full bearing. The best thing for you to do now, to insure getting fruit for that time, is to procure the plants already started. You will see several firms advertising them, at a small cost, in the Review. Set the plants fourteen inches apart to give best results. Some allow only twelve inches, but this is rather crowding. Five to six pounds per plant is a fair average, though a plant can be made to produce more than this. W. S. Croydon.

WINTER BEAUTY TOMATO.

At the January meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club J. Hamlin, of the Riverbank Nursery, Geneva, Ill., exhibited a plate of Winter Beauty tomato, a variety of fair size, round, smooth and splendidly colored, raised by Sutton & Sons, Reading, England. In speaking of the variety Mr. Hamlin says:

"It sets freely through the winter months and should be useful to every private gardener who would like to get some in for Christmas. It also pays well for market, for which purpose I grow it. I was gathering early in January 200 pounds per week from 200 plants and they are thick with fruit, averaging five pounds to the plant, and still setting well. They had brought 35 cents a pound in the Chicago market. I plant on a bench, with roots confined in a space eighteen inches wide and twelve inches deep. The soil is good, with cow manure well worked in. I plant one foot apart and grow on a single stem. The plants will continue to bear for months and will average fifteen to eighteen pounds of fruit per plant. I use a span-roofed house running north and south. One row only is planted on each side, with Lilium Harrisii on one side under the tomatoes and Boston ferns on the other side. The variety is good only for winter work."

FUNGUS ON LETTUCE.

I herewith send you some diseased lettuce plants. We find them in new soil as well as in the soil taken from the hotbed yard. The plants grow nicely for about two weeks, then get yellow and spotted and the roots look dead. Perhaps twenty feet in a bench will be all right; then there will be another batch of this. There is no trouble in the hotbeds or coldframes, only in the greenhouse. Sometimes the temperature gets down to 45 degrees at night, but it usually is about 50 degrees. I ventilate whenever possible and use cistern water. I have used air-slaked lime in the soil, also powdered Bordeaux mixture for dusting the house. There is as yet no difference. H. S.

Your trouble is a fungus disease, the spores of which have got into your bench, probably through the agency of some decayed vegetable matter. The disease will begin in one spot and spread over the bench from that point. It is a hard thing to check, once it gets a start. The only thing to do is to pull up the plants as soon as you see the first appearance of the disease and stir up the soil around where the plants were, to break up the mycelium and help stop the spread of the fungus. Lower your temperature at least 5 degrees, as 45 degrees is quite high enough for lettuce and an occasional drop to 40 degrees won't do your plants any harm. I have often seen a drop of temperature check the spread of certain fungus diseases very effectively when other remedies had failed.

Fungus diseases seem to be becoming more and more prevalent year after year and the only certain remedy is to sterilize the soil. This insures the destruction of all spores of fungi in the soil and, if care is used not to introduce any such spores through the medium of manure or other material, the crop ought to carry through without any trouble. But it must be borne in mind that any decayed or decaying vegetable matter will produce fungi, even if the soil has been sterilized, so that extreme care should be used to remove carefully any yellow or partially decaying leaves that appear on the plants; and if it is intended to plant a second crop after the first has been cut in the same soil care should be taken to pull up the stems of the lettuce when the heads are cut, so that they will not be left to decay.

I don't mean to imply that this applies to your case; but in going through houses used for lettuce forcing I have often seen not only the stems of the lettuce left in the soil, but the bad leaves pulled from the lettuce and left on top of the soil to rot. Then, when the next crop was attacked by some fungus disease the grower could not understand how it came to be there, seeing that the first crop had done so well. Such carelessness is inexcusable and can only result in trouble, as I have said here before. It is the man who is particular about these little details who is surest of success and, considering the increasing prevalence of fungus diseases, too much vigilance cannot be used in preventing its introduction or spread. W. S. CROYDON.

AT GRAND RAPIDS.

In gardening under glass Grand Rapids has forged to the front with such strides that the lettuce industry has grown to a point where it is one of the city's principal outputs and there is in and about Grand Rapids and contributing to the Grand Rapids market almost $750,000 invested in greenhouses for the forcing and out-of-season growing of lettuce, radishes, cucumbers and parsley. It is conservatively estimated that Grand Rapids this year will ship to the southern and western markets more than 500,000 pounds of the best head lettuce ever grown under glass.

This city has but one competitor in the field. Toledo, Ohio, is a bidder for supremacy in the forcing lettuce market, but Grand Rapids has always been able to hold its own. Ashtabula, Ohio, is the other of the big three middle western forcing lettuce producers, but that city handles the eastern trade, a section that Grand Rapids only caters to when the Ashtabula product is exhausted.

In the vegetable greenhouse business, too, the city is attracting attention along new lines. Local growers have experimented extensively with greenhouse tomatoes. It has never proved a marked success and it is too early to say whether Samuel Perry's promising crop of more than fifty bushels of green tomatoes will be successfully ripened and colored and put on the market. In his Burton avenue greenhouses everything looks favorable and Mr. Perry is himself optimistic. If the crop succeeds it will prove remunerative. Edward Taylor and Eli Cross have tried the tomato business in previous years with more or less indifferent success.

In and near Grand Rapids there are about seventy greenhouse gardeners who contribute forcing lettuce and the subsequent underglass vegetable crops to the Grand Rapids market. Lettuce is the principal industry. When the final lettuce crop is off, the houses are planted to radishes, and in turn to cucumbers, before summer. These secondary vegetables add much to the profit of the business. More than 50,000 bushels of cucumbers were last spring marketed here, and the radish crop no one seems able to even estimate. Parsley is also an extensive secondary crop in local greenhouses.

TROUBLE WITH LETTUCE.

We are having trouble with our lettuce. The main or tap-root decays and the plant dies. Or if the disease does not attack until there are a number of side rootlets, it lives for awhile, but the outer leaves decay at the base and the plant is no good. Keeping the ground moist or dry does not seem to make any difference. We have had little sunshine; otherwise the treatment has been the same as last spring, when we grew the finest of lettuce. Can you give us any help? S. A. C.

Your trouble is stem-rot, a disease which is often prevalent in lettuce houses in winter. It is the work of fungus which has got into your soil in some way. The answer given to H. S. in this issue will apply to your case. Dull, cloudy weather is most congenial to the development and spread of the disease. As the weather becomes brighter and warmer you will probably have less trouble with it.

W. S. CROYDON.

HAVERHILL, MASS.—Perley R. Follett will build a new greenhouse in the spring.

THE REVIEW is gaining many good points every year. I congratulate you on your good work. You can depend on my dollar every year. It is worth $10 to every florist who reads it.—CHARLES BROWN, Canton, O.

CHOICE VEGETABLE SEEDS For Forcing

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

VISITED CHICAGO: C. P. Braslan, San Jose, Cal., heralded by no brass bands.

WHOLESALE seedsmen report a heavy run of business and are working to the limit.

THE Cox Seed Co., San Francisco, has completed a new warehouse at Glen Echo, Cal., and is handling the principal stock there.

IT is worthy of note in the season's catalogues that as a general rule the strongest adjectives are printed on the cheapest paper.

THE Nebraska growers report better weather for drying sweet corn and the somewhat delayed shipments will soon be on the way.

THE St. Louis Seed Co. offers a "beautiful $10 portrait" absolutely free to everyone who orders packets to the value of $1.50 from its 1907 catalogue. Seedsmen will be interested in a glance through the book.

THE truck growers in the vicinity of Muscatine, Ia., whose principal crops are for the Heinz and other pickle factories there, have formed a permanent association. S. V. Chenoweth is president and J. C. Stuart secretary.

THE canners of peas have already sold their 1907 pack up to the limit of probable production. The demand for futures has not yet been satisfied and as long as prices keep advancing the value of canners' varieties of seed peas will keep pace.

THE John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis., does not spend its money in calendered paper for its catalogue, but the book nevertheless is interesting reading. The Salzer Co. depends on its catalogue for all the business it gets, which is no small amount. In consequence, the prices are well considered,

In the same period the imports of plants, bulbs, etc., were of the aggregate value of $13,034.

THE A. A. Berry Seed Co., Clarinda, Ia., reports having mailed 93,000 catalogues.

GEORGE S. GREEN, of the Illinois Seed Co., Chicago, is spending the week visiting the trade in the east.

WM. HOISINGTON is making a trip south and southwest for the A. J. Brown Seed Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

ONE of the most attractive catalogues of the year is that of the Charles H. Lilly Co., Seattle. The subject is the Richmond rose, printed in colors, on pebbled paper. The work is excellent. The catalogue contains a general line of seeds, plants, nursery stock and poultry and farm supplies, garden tools, etc.

It is interesting to note in the 1907 catalogues how many houses there are that call themselves "America's largest."

TERMS IN THE SEED TRADE.

Lester L. Morse, president of C. C. Morse & Co., San Francisco, makes the following statement under date of January 11:

"C. C. Morse & Co. announce that, in common with the other seed growers in California, they have agreed to change the terms of payment on contracts which have heretofore ruled in the seed business, making them sixty days, or 2 per cent discount for cash. This action they claim is made necessary on account of general business conditions on the Pacific coast, where there is almost a famine of labor and where nearly everything the grower buys to conduct his farm is bought on a spot cash basis. They claim they are only asking that the seed dealers share a small part of their burdens by consenting to these reasonable business terms.

"They state that their action in not sending a representative among the trade this year and in not wishing to book advance contracts against their onion crop was not influenced in any way, shape or manner by the attitude or action of any other grower or any other seedsman and was decided upon on account of the general conditions only. Excepting in the matter of terms they state positively that they have no understandings or arrangements with any other grower or growers and they are in no combinations. Any statement to the contrary is wholly without foundation."

Executive Committee Meeting.

The executive committee of the American Seed Trade Association met at the New Willard hotel, Washington D. C., January 10, and decided to hold the next convention at New York city June 25-27. There were present President H. W. Wood, W. H. Grenell, J. C. Robinson, and Secretary C. E. Kendel, and by invitation Albert McCullough, Henry Nungesser, George S. Green, Vice-President C. S. Burge, Alexander Forbes, W. Atlee Burpee and F. W. Bolgiano.

C. E. Kendel, Sec'y.

The executive committee met to decide the place for holding the next convention and to arrange a program for it. New York was decided upon, but the hotel has not yet been selected. There will be several valuable papers prepared, but their subjects have not been written out (or more properly, their titles) so nothing can be given out along those lines.

A meeting before the agricultural committee of the senate was held merely to appear again at this time and add a few more statements to the voluminous testimony in support of the contention made last spring before the house committee on agriculture. What the outcome will be is problematic.

A meeting was held with the agrostologists of the Department of Agriculture for the purpose of answering a set of questions relating to the question of seed adulteration and while none of the gentlemen referred to was interviewed afterwards, we could all plainly see that they were agreeably surprised to find that the seedsmen are just as anxious to stop this pernicious practice as they are themselves. The seedsmen made some suggestions that will no doubt aid the Department materially in protecting the public against the two or three unscrupulous dealers who have brought the whole seed trade into disrepute and brought suspicion on all of us. A complete report will be made by the committee on seed adulteration of the American Seed Trade Association in due time and it will make very interesting reading.

SWEET PEAS.

There is no department of a seedsman's business more profitable than the flower seed department, and there is nothing more profitable in that department than sweet peas. It is, therefore, not surprising, says a seedsman writing in the Horticultural Advertiser, that every seedsman worthy the name aims at being somewhat of a sweet pea specialist. The real way to acquire an acquaintance with the many varieties now before the public is of course to grow them, but this is impossible in many instances, and we have men in the trade doing well in sweet peas, and who have a good reputation for them, who never grow a flower. How, it may be asked, do they acquire the requisite knowledge? By observation and reading. If one takes the Sweet Pea Annual as a guide, and fixes on the varieties that come out on top of the audit and election, one may be assured they are not far removed from the best in their respective color classes. The next thing of importance is to find out where reliable stocks of the varieties in question can be obtained, and this in the future, more than in the past, is going to make up success. When everybody is keen on sweet peas, the men whose stocks are truest are going to have the best of it, and rightly so.

The new departure made by the Sweet

viewed afterwards, we could all plainly see that they were agreeably surprised to find that the seedsmen are just as anxious to stop this pernicious practice as they are themselves. The seedsmen made some suggestions that will no doubt aid the Department materially in protecting the public against the two or three unscrupulous dealers who have brought the whole seed trade into disrepute and brought suspicion on all of us. A complete report will be made by the committee on seed adulteration of the American Seed Trade Association in due time and it will make very interesting reading.

SWEET PEAS.

There is no department of a seedsman's business more profitable than the flower seed department, and there is nothing more profitable in that department than sweet peas. It is, therefore, not surprising, says a seedsman writing in the Horticultural Advertiser, that every seedsman worthy the name aims at being somewhat of a sweet pea specialist. The real way to acquire an acquaintance with the many varieties now before the public is of course to grow them, but this is impossible in many instances, and we have men in the trade doing well in sweet peas, and who have a good reputation for them, who never grow a flower. How, it may be asked, do they acquire the requisite knowledge? By observation and reading. If one takes the Sweet Pea Annual as a guide, and fixes on the varieties that come out on top of the audit and election, one may be assured they are not far removed from the best in their respective color classes. The next thing of importance is to find out where reliable stocks of the varieties in question can be obtained, and this in the future, more than in the past, is going to make up success. When everybody is keen on sweet peas, the men whose stocks are truest are going to have the best of it, and rightly so.

The new departure made by the Sweet

Pea Society in appointing a floral committee is a step in the right direction. Twelve experts have been appointed, who will visit the society's trials at Reading, which are to be again conducted by Mr. C. Foster, at the University College Gardens. No variety will receive a first-class certificate unless the stock grown at Reading is fairly true. Those who saw the trials last year know that many stocks of much vaunted novelties instead of being true more resembled trials of mixtures. It is proposed that this new committee shall vote on new varieties by some form of ballot. Principals of sweet pea firms are not allowed to be members of the committee, but their expert growers are, and the committee is formed of one-half trade and one-half amateur growers.

Another important work this committee should take up is dealing with too much alike varieties, and members of the trade who are members of the Sweet Pea Society should press the society to do this for all they are worth. The Spencer group will be the cause of endless trouble in the near future, if the varieties of it are not dealt with by the Sweet Pea Society with a firm hand. In fact the Sweet Pea Society will only justify its continued existence if it does so.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The members of the Florists' Club of Providence, to the number of about fifty, celebrated the eleventh anniversary of their organization January 10 with a dinner and entertainment. The festivities took place in the new store building of Rennie & Thompson, 135 Washington street. The room and tables, as befitted the trade represented in the gathering, were elaborately decorated for the occasion with palms and cut flowers. The dinner, which began at 8:30, was preceded by a social half hour. It was followed by a stereopticon entertainment, the first part of which was of an amusing nature and consisted partly of good-naturedly humorous hits at the pet traits and peculiarities of club members, which were received with glee. The second portion of the entertainment consisted of a travel lecture, accompanied by views of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales. The lecture was by W. B. Wilson, field secretary of the Sunday School Association. Dr. A. J. Wheeler, of the Rhode Island Agricultural College, was present as the guest of the club.

Arrangements for the occasion were in charge of a committee consisting of M. Sweeney, chairman; William Appleton, Alexander Macrae and Secretary William E. Chappell.

OCEANIC, N. J.

The third annual dinner of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society was held at the Sheridan hotel, Thursday evening, January 10. About sixty members and invited guests sat down to a bountiful supply of good things. The tables were tastefully decorated with plants and flowers supplied by the members. All passed a pleasant evening.

Regrets were expressed as to the absence of one of our members—yes, and the father of this society; but I know if he was not there in person his heart was with us. I refer to Nicholas Butterbach, who because of serious illness could not be present.

Morris county was represented by Mr. Herrington, C. H. Totty and R. M. Shultz. Mr. Herrington officiated as toastmaster and his remarks were timely and to the point. He certainly proved to us that he was well acquainted with the names of our members and guests. He kept things busy from start to finish. William F. Woodill, of Brooklyn, rendered beautiful tenor solos, and other gentlemen contributed to the musical part of the program. WM. TURNER.

BURLINGTON, IA.

The voice of the happy singing florist, Peter Nees, who has been such a prominent figure on our streets for many years, has been missed for some time, and it is with feelings of sorrow that we learn that the good man is seriously ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Walter Doughtly, on Cedar street. Report says he is partially paralyzed and that the attending physician has little to give in the way of encouragement. Mr. Nees is 84 years old and has always enjoyed good health and in this hour of trial in the evening of his life he has the sympathy of every Burlington resident.

WE have received orders from Pennsylvania on the east to Washington on the Pacific coast from our advertisement in the REVIEW.—W. C. HILL FLORAL CO., Streator, Ill., Dec. 3, 1906.

PACIFIC COAST.

THE United States Department of Agriculture has issued a bulletin, No. 271, entitled "Forage-Crop Practices in Western Oregon and Western Washington," which may be of interest to some of the readers of the REVIEW.

PASADENA, CAL.—A. L. Harmon, formerly conducting the Iola Greenhouses, at Iola, Ia., has located here and established the Iola Poultry Ranch, making a specialty of White Wyandottes and White Leghorns.

SPOKANE, WASH.

The best business ever experienced seems to be the general report in regard to the Christmas trade, carnations and roses selling readily at any price asked. Violets were in great demand and the supply so small that at the approach of a violet customer one found himself longing for Rhinebeck. Palms, ferns, and the rather limited supply of plants suitable for gifts handled in this great northwest, all were disposed of by Christmas eve, while holly, mistletoe, roping, Oregon grape and wreaths were called for until late on Christmas day.

All the retailers succeeded in having good window displays and are to be congratulated upon results obtained in this respect.

Recent visitors were, L. C. Goodfriend, of Werthheimer Bros., New York, and J. J. Karins, of Henry A. Dreer Co., Philadelphia. The latter gentleman testifies to the prosperity of this great section by a well-filled order book and is wearing his most congenial smile in consequence.

KENNEDY.

VICTORIA, B. C.

The Christmas Market.

Christmas trade was a record breaker. A few Paper Whites and a few mums were all that were left over. Carnations were cleaned out at $1.50 per dozen, a price never before obtained in this town. Princess of Wales violets sold at 75 cents per bunch of twenty-five. Sweet peas at 50 cents per dozen. Mums were cheap, $2 per dozen being the limit. Holly was short. A strong local demand and large export orders caused a rise in price.

Various Notes.

Fairview greenhouses showed some handsome baskets of plants, all of which were sold.

Mrs. M. A. Flewin has just completed a handsome conservatory, abutting on Park road, which is a great improvement to the property.

Real estate is advancing rapidly in value. There is quite a boom, in fact, and it is reported that several who have built greenhouses as rented or leased land will shortly be moving further out.

H. Dunn has remodeled his heating system.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We are still in the midst of an increasing downpour and florists are beginning to wonder when we will have sunshine again. Consequently there is a dampened ardor in reference to everything connected with the handling of flowers. Business since the holiday rush has been quiet, but the weather has had much to do with it and there is some activity in the line of funeral work. The supply of flowers, owing to the continued dark weather, has been short; still, this supply has been sufficient to meet demands.

Violets since the season opened have been scarce, but now that we have an abundance of moisture they are becoming plentiful and prices will probably lower in a day or two. Roses, outside of Brides and Maids, seem to be off crop everywhere and fancy Beauties still bring top prices. Valley is easier and of slow sale. Several of our large growers did not get their anticipated cuts in time for the holidays and are throwing them on the crowded market now.

Carnations are a trifle lower in price and are of good quality and fair quantity. There is some demand for fancy whites, but other colors move slowly.

Chrysanthemums, strange to relate, are still in considerable evidence and come in very handy for funeral orders. Daffodils, of the Ard Reigh variety, are seen everywhere. Roman hyacinths and narcissi are being used largely for funeral orders, being about the only thing worth mentioning at this writing.

Various Notes.

Hutchings & James will be in line again with a heavy stock of poinsettias for the coming season. This firm has had remarkable success since starting its new greenhouses at Elmhurst and making a specialty of this popular plant.

The city of Oakland will give a three-days' floral fiesta, commencing May 1. Many prizes will be given for decorations of various kinds.

James Niven, the well-known landscape gardener of Ross station, is exhibiting some prize fowls at the California poultry show at Idora Park this week.

An election to bond the city of Oakland to purchase over 100 acres to add to the city parks will shortly be held in that town.

Local trade with the retail nurserymen has been slow this year. Continued rainy weather has greatly interfered with the planting of small stock.

L. M. Bowen, the Berkeley landscape gardener, has returned from a week's trip to Los Angeles and vicinity.

The Cox Seed Co. has completed a new seed warehouse on its grounds at Glen Echo. It has removed its principal stock of seed to this place, having much more room for handling than in its San Francisco warehouse.

DEMAND FOR NURSERY STOCK.

The demand for nursery stock has never been better than it is at the present time on the Pacific coast. This includes all the country from San Diego on the south to Seattle on the north and from the coast well into the interior. In spite of the setback that the central portion of the coast received by the recent earthquake and fire, there has never been a time in which there was so much business being done or with better prospects for its continuance. Naturally this has affected the nursery business as well as other lines, and we are now in the midst of the excitement.

The heavy demands for dried fruits and the money recently made by both the growers and packers of raisins has put these industries in a most flourishing condition. Many thousands of acres will be and are being at present planted and enormous tracts of land opened up to colonization. The farmers are making money. There is good sale for all products and, although the first effects of the demands for fruit and nut trees and grapevines are enjoyed by the dealers in fruit trees, there always follows a secondary demand for ornamental stock from the general nurseryman.

These conditions are noticeable in the towns and cities as well as in the country districts, and, although the sales of stock are of a much different nature, they have been heavy since the season opened.

From observations of the quantity of goods on hand, throughout the coast, it is evident that there is not sufficient stock to fill the present demands and much eastern grown material is being shipped in. In the line of fruit trees there is an extraordinary demand for some varieties of peaches and apricots, which has not been supplied and cannot be with the stocks in sight here. There is a steady demand along all lines of fruit and the quantities planted will be the largest in our history.

The natural sequence of good times is the free spending of money and usually when the first growers finish their orchard or vineyard planting they spend a few dollars for ornamental trees or plants.

There are not over a dozen large ornamental nurseries on the Pacific coast. This may sound strange, but it is nevertheless a fact. There are, however, many small places doing a local business, but the really large commercial places can be limited to a dozen. This is not inclusive of fruit tree growers, who probably will reach the number of fifty, all of them of large size.

California, and the coast generally, is not well supplied with ornamental growers and there will be but little stock to hold over for the coming season, from present indications. G.

NAHANT, MASS.—George A. James will erect a greenhouse and potting-shed in the spring.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The last week has not tended to bring out anything startling in the way of business. Business has been only fair and the prices have been held up on account of the fact that there has been only enough stock coming in to fill the orders.

The weather has been decidedly against the flower business. It has been warm, averaging about 60 degrees most of the time and on one day it went as high as 70 degrees. This is something unusual, even in this climate. And rain, there is no let-up to it. I should say that five days in the last thirty during which the sun showed its face, even for a short time, would be really more than we had. With such conditions you can readily realize the condition of the greenhouses. Everything is soft and weak-stemmed. And there are no prospects for colder and more seasonable weather. A few weeks of cold, clear weather is what we need to give the business a push. With present conditions we can scarcely expect to have things up to standard.

At present there is a good supply of almost everything. There are plenty of roses and carnations of all varieties, also bulbous flowers, violets and all sorts of green goods. There are few orders which cannot be filled. The shipping trade has been unusually active and a great deal of the surplus flowers have been sent out of the city and at good prices. There can be no question but that the shipping business out of this city has been improving yearly and that there is a great future in it as soon as we are able to get a larger and better supply of flowers at all times. Having the best outlet to the south, it is but a matter of time when we will control the entire business of that section.

Society Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Cincinnati Florists' Society was held in the club rooms, January 12, and was well attended. Charles Knopf, of the B. K. & B. Floral Co., Richmond, Ind., was present and staged two seedling carnations. One, a white, named Miss Sarah A. Hill, was of extraordinary size and had all of the earmarks of a comer. The other was of the Lawson type and color, but a decided improvement on that variety. It was called Superior. They were staged for the society's certificate and were judged by F. Dellar, Gus Adrian and Henry Schwarz. This committee awarded Miss Sarah A. Hill eighty-eight points and Superior eighty-seven.

Mr. Knopf gave a little talk on his recent visit to Chicago, which was very interesting. The following gentlemen also gave short talks on various topics of general interest: Simon J. Hider, E. G. Gillett, Geo. Corbett, F. Dellar, Henry Schwarz, R. Witterstaetter and Gus Adrian.

The subject of giving a flower show in this city next November was brought up and it was easily seen that the conditions were about ripe. There was a decided feeling in favor of giving a first-class show; one which will attract the attention of the largest growers and one that will be a credit to the city. It was voted to give the board of directors the power to draft a schedule of prizes, make an estimate of the amount of money needed, and otherwise go into this subject with the idea of finding out just what we could do and whether we would be safe to go ahead and give a good, big show. It has been over fifteen years since this city has had a first-class show.

Max Rudolph has been on the sick list, but is able to be about now.

EVERGREENS are steadily gaining in favor.

NURSERYMEN will be interested in the notes on the demand for nursery stock on the Pacific coast, to be found on another page of this issue.

THE movers of big trees are having plenty of work this winter and are getting good prices, more in keeping with the facilities required for this line of business.

THE Western Association of Nurserymen hopes to do something toward securing the adoption of some standard grades for nursery stock. A. L. Brooke, of Topeka, is chairman of a committee to make recommendations.

THE program and arrangement committees already are at work on plans for the Detroit convention of the American Association of Nurserymen. A good attendance is assured and interest will not be permitted to flag.

IF there is an agricultural publication which is not publishing a "spraying number" in February it should overcome its modesty and do something to attract our attention. But the more spraying the better for the nurserymen.

J. HORACE MCFARLAND says this will be a lively year in the nursery trade, one in which the careless and slipshod man will come nearer making a living and in which the good, lively hustler, who grows good stock and offers it honestly and attractively, will make a good profit.

CONGRESSMAN N. W. HALE, of Knoxville, Tenn., is a member of the legislative committee of the American Association of Nurserymen. He says he sees no prospect of securing at this session of Congress a moment for the consideration of a national law for the inspection of nursery stock.

As an example of what happens when a man does a good job it is worth recording that a certain nurseryman landscapist received a commission from one of a colony of well-to-do suburbanites. The work fitted the situation so well that nine of the neighbors had work done last fall and the remainder are indicating a desire to fix up their surroundings in the spring.

INSPECTION IN UTAH.

John P. Sorensen, horticultural inspector for Salt Lake county, Utah, inspected in 1906 seven carloads and sixty parcels of trees from outside the state, and fumigated most of them. He also inspected and fumigated the stock grown by home nurseries as required by law, eight carloads and 160 boxes and bundles of which have been shipped out of the county and three-fourths of them out of the state. Two thousand of imported trees were condemned and burned in one lot.

"Five hundred thousand trees were budded this summer in Salt Lake county," says Inspector Sorensen, "about one-third from fine bearing trees, the balance from young stock. Nurseries should be compelled to bud and graft from bearing stock true to name, and agents from nurseries outside the state should be under bond to sell stock true to name, as some other states have already incorporated in their laws.

"All nurseries have been inspected twice and some three times during the growing season. Some 10,000 trees have been dug, fumigated and inspected for root diseases for fall delivery, but 250,000 have been dug and put in houses and frost-proof cellars and part of them fumigated, sorted and inspected, the balance to be sorted and inspected through the winter."

OKLAHOMA NURSERYMEN.

The eleventh annual meeting of the Oklahoma Nurserymen's Association was held in Oklahoma City, January 8. There was a good attendance and a spirited discussion of trade conditions and trade tendencies, but the only action of importance, outside of election of officers, was the decision of the association to support a movement looking to a national inspection law. The officers elected are: President, J. A. Lopman, Enid; vice-president, J. W. Tetrick, Blackwell; secretary-treasurer, C. E. Garee, Noble.

COTONEASTERS.

The cotoneasters are among the brightest of our hardy berry-bearing plants. C. frigida is one of the best, the large bunches of scarlet berries being of much beauty during late autumn and early winter. It is full early to write much about the newer C. angustifolia, says a correspondent of the Gardeners' Magazine, yet this much might be said, that it appears quite hardy. C. Simonsii, C. microphylla and C. buxifolia are old inhabitants of our gardens, and are well known to the planters, especially the former, whose upright branches clothed with bright red berries form a conspicuous plant during winter.

Nicholson, in his Dictionary of Gardening, says cotoneasters are easily raised from seed, but I have not found this to be so, with the exception of C. angustifolia and C. bacillaris. It is a great pity the seeds do not germinate quicker. Several species I sowed more than a year ago show no sign of germination as yet. I was speaking to our forester here a few days since on the subject, and he said he found the best plan was to put the seeds in a box with plenty of sand, allowing them to remain there a year, and then sow them in the ordinary way. This is how he serves many of the hollies, and finds that by far the greater number germinate when thus treated.

The birds are partial to the berries of C. frigida should a few days' hard frost set in, and there are no worms to be got at. Cotoneasters are increased by layers, and many are grafted on the common C. vulgaris, and, I believe, on the quince and hawthorn as well, but when seedlings can be raised they quickly grow into good size, and are the most satisfactory as there is no trouble with suckers.

3 NEW CANNAS

WILLIAM SAUNDERS

The flowers are large, of splendid form, and are borne very freely in immense clusters. The color is a deep rich shining scarlet slightly dappled with crimson. Foliage is a rich bronze. Height, 3½ to 4 feet. We believe that Wm. Saunders is decidedly the most perfect Canna of this type that has been introduced. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

OTTAWA

Is a strong grower, very robust and 5 to 6 feet high. The flowers are large and beautifully formed, color is carmine with tints of old rose and deep coral, add to this the silken sheen and you can imagine the effect a few plants will produce.

NOTE—We had this Canna on trial among the Canadian experimental stations last summer and this is the official report of their expert: "Quite distinct and one of the most beautiful shades of color I ever saw in Cannas. Of 70 massed in one bed during the past season, this was the most floriferous in the collection, coming into bloom early and continuing until cut down by frost, as many as 13 expanded heads of blooms being counted at one time on a plant, and not a poor one among them, all being of immense size." 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

NEW YORK

Has the Orchid type of flower. They have much more substance than the flowers of the other varieties of this class, and will stand the hot sunshine as well as the toughest varieties of cannas. The color is a solid rich scarlet covered with a beautiful glowing sheen. The flowers are large and contrast beautifully with the dark bronze foliage. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

Send for our list and prices of 60 other leading varieties of Cannas.

GRAND RAPIDS.

The Market.

Weather conditions are not so favorable as could be wished. American Beauties, except short-stemmed, are practically off the market. Roses are scarce, while carnations are in fair supply, except when, as has happened frequently of late, funeral work has cleaned everything up close. Many weddings and receptions also help to keep things lively. Prices have dropped a bit since Christmas. Roses retail at from $1 to $1.50 per dozen; carnations, 50 cents, with red and Enchantress 75 cents per dozen; Paper Whites, 50 cents to 75 cents per dozen, and Romans 50 cents. Azaleas, poinsettias, Gloire de Lorraine and cyclamen are still features in the window decorations which are being kept up nicely this season.

Various Notes.

J. A. Creelman, formerly with Charles Chadwick, went a few weeks ago to San Diego, Cal., to live. En route his 11-year-old daughter, Marion, caught a cold which developed into diphtheria, of which she died, January 6. He has the sympathy of the trade in his bereavement.

January 4 a new addition to the ranks of the craft arrived; by name, Ceylon Clark Buskirk; home, Big Rapids, Mich. Congratulations are in order.

Honorable William Alden Smith, our esteemed representative in congress, has just been elected United States senator from Michigan. A reception was given him at the City hall January 12. The decorations were elaborate and great credit is due W. L. Cukerski for the taste shown in the arrangement and elaboration of detail. The city greenhouses were stripped for the occasion which, to the local inhabitants at least, is a memorable one.

The bulb men are beginning to arrive, all reporting that they are booking orders in excess of last year and find everybody eager to buy. G. F. C.

THE REVIEW is full of valuable information. In fact, it is the best florists' paper I have ever read. I would not be without it for ten times its cost.—GEO. FAUTH, Woodlawn, Md.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

WASHINGTON.

Spring Exhibition.

The Washington Florists' Club has prepared a list of premiums for the spring exhibition, which it is to hold in conjunction with the annual exhibition of the American Rose Society, March 13 to 15. The Rose Society has a list of its own, providing for exhibits of cut roses and rose plants. The Washington club has aimed to include everything else in the list of spring stock which will be available those days. The list includes premiums, three in each class, for single plants and groups of both flowering and decorative plants. There are premiums for many varieties of bulbous stock and special premiums for general displays. A number of classes are supplied for cut blooms of carnations and also for violets. There are fifty-three classes in all and more will be added from time to time. Those desiring copies of the list may obtain same by addressing Charles McCauley, Eighteenth and Kearney streets, N. E., Washington, D. C.

ELBERON, N. J.

The Elberon Horticultural Society held a most interesting meeting January 7. The principal feature was the elegant display of fine carnations, consisting of fifteen vases, in which the following varieties were shown: Enchantress, Lawson, Victory, Robert Craig, Lady Bountiful, White Lawson and a large vase of Winsor from F. R. Pierson Co., of Tarrytown, was admired by all. A. Bauer gave an interesting talk on "The Carnation of the Past and Present." The society held true to the old and tried varieties and certainly were loyal to Enchantress, Red Lawson and Lady Bountiful. The society extended to Mr. Bauer a hearty vote of thanks.

Flowers and vegetables were exhibited by the following gardeners: A. Bauer, carnations and celery; A. Greit, Marie Louise violets; James Kennedy, carnations; William D. Robertson, Centradenia florida and mushrooms; Henry Wood, carnations and vegetables; Peter Murray, carnations; Fred W. Dettlinger, Princess of Wales violets.

We wish to ANNOUNCE TO THE TRADE that we have withdrawn our Crimson Carnation from the market, at least for this season, and perhaps permanently. During the last few weeks of dark weather it has shown an inclination to contract a disease which if allowed to get any headway would speedily ruin it for commercial growing. The strain of dissemination, and subjection to changed methods of culture would undoubtedly cause it to go to pieces right away, and knowing the circumstances, it would be unjust to the variety and the trade to let it go out. We will continue to grow it as our main crimson, and if it throws off the disease entirely we may let it go out later, but not until we feel assured that it will trot, and be a credit to us. While we regret this very much, we are grateful that it showed this weakness before we had begun sending out the stock.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

A committee of the Illinois State Florists' Association, consisting of J. F. Ammann, Edwardsville; Albert T. Hey, Springfield, and Professor A. C. Beal, of Urbana, was in attendance at the meeting of the Board of Agriculture January 7 and 8. The committee succeeded, with the assistance of Mr. O'Dwyer, superintendent of floriculture at the state fair, in getting an increase in the appropriation for premiums for floriculture at the state fair, from $1,500 to $2,500.

Each of the above named committeemen made a few remarks before the board. Professor Beal showed statistics, on a chart, giving an approximate estimate on the vast amount of glass area, etc., throughout the state devoted to the growing of flowers. Mr. Hey urged a more liberal amount in premiums and a general revision of the premium list. Mr. Ammann dwelt upon the necessity of a new building for exhibiting flowers and plants and practical assistance in the managing of this department. A great many members of this board seem favorably inclined to advance floriculture at the fair. And it is the opinion of this committee that with a little well organized work on their part the florists can accomplish a great deal, but we must keep at it.

The committee later met with Mr. O'Dwyer and drew up a skeleton premium list from which Mr. O'Dwyer will have preliminary lists printed and sent out among the florists in the near future, giving all plenty of time to grow stock for the greatest state fair flower show ever held. J. F. A.

Aurora, Ill.—The $50,000 greenhouse of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy has been torn down during the last few weeks. The smoke and dust made it a failure. NEW ORLEANS.

The first convention of the Society of Southern Florists will be held in New Orleans, February 14 to 16. All florists, nurserymen, supply houses and manufacturers are cordially invited to make exhibits. The south offers a vast field for every branch of the florists' business. While distance has kept southern florists away from northern conventions, they will all come to New Orleans during the Mardi Gras and the exhibits will be seen. New acquaintances will be made and new business will be the result. Communicate at once with the undersigned committee, who will take care of your exhibit.

Price of space is as follows: Twenty-five square feet, $5; fifty square feet, $10; 100 square feet, $15, payable in advance. Freight on all exhibits must be prepaid. Cartage to the exhibition hall at cost. Certificates of merit will be awarded to valuable novelties and meritorious exhibits in all classes. Address Ed Baker, 2263 Carondelet street, chairman. For entrance fee and badge send before February 1 to Joseph Steckler Seed Co., Ltd., 512 Gravier street.

An elavorate program is being arranged and at the different meetings some papers will be read by florists from Louisiana, Texas, Florida and other states. The principal subjects will be: "Ways and Means for the Advancement of Horticulture in the South," "Rose Growing Under Glass in the South," "What the South Can Grow Profitably for the Northern Markets," "Packing and Shipping Express Rate," "Injurious Insects and Remedies," "School Gardens," "Profitable Orchids for the Florists" and "Chrysanthemum Growing in the South." Circulars are being mailed to the trade and, no doubt, this first convention will be the beginning of a strong organization which will advance the horticultural interests all over the United States. M. M. L.

MONTREAL.

The market here is having a short supply of good roses, with prices ranging high. Carnations are arriving in good supply and of excellent quality. Violets are plentiful.

J. S. Murray had the decorations for the ladies' dinner at the Mount Royal Club. They were entirely of Beauties and lily of the valley.

Miss Cairns has been busy on funeral designs and cut flowers.

Hall & Robinson had the decorations for the Bachelors' ball at the Hotel Windsor. They used greens and spring flowers.

D. J. Sinclair has been busy handling large quantities of bulb stock, tulips and daffodils, finding a ready sale. He is also handling a fine lot of extra special Beauties and violets from the United States. His eastern shipping trade has been increasing rapidly and customers find it exceedingly convenient. W. BUFFALO.

State of Business.

I don't remember that I told you anything about our New Year's trade. The weather was mild, the reverse of Christmas, and sales were ahead of last year. Violets were in great demand and a number of plants that were left over from Christmas went well. Trade since the holidays has seemed quiet, but it is more apparent than actual. There are not too many good flowers on the market. Roses and carnations are all cleaned up daily. Paper Whites and Romans go slowly, but they fill in and none go to waste.

Various Notes.

F. R. Pierson sent us a few dozen of the grand carnation Winsor. It is a great keeper and the color we are all after. We expect to see a grand display of it at Toronto.

Walter Mott gave us a call the other day in the interest of Bobbink & Atkins. On the same day we received C. Schwake, of New York, who talks lilies for Charles F. Meyer. Mr. Forbach happened to be along, so there was a hot talk on lilies. A remark by Mr. Forbach is worth repeating, as it may comfort some of those who may think their lilies late. He said that ten years ago, when in the employ of Joseph H. Rebstock, he had a number of Japanese bulbs that were only just showing through the soil February 1. The boys laughed at his thought of their being in flower at Easter, which that year happened to be the middle of April. In a steady temperature of 70 degrees there were ninety per cent of them in flower at the desired time. It is the old story: if the bulbs are well ripened before being dug and are given time to root in the pots, in a steady high temperature they will progress and flower.

At last we have had a meeting of the Florists' Club. On his return to life Mr. Neubeck was as chipper as ever. The report of the committee on summer outing was read and approved and to the credit of the committee a small balance was returned to the treasury of the club instead of asking the treasury to make up a deficit. There was a deplorable absence of city members and if it had not been for the loyal country members there would not have been a quorum. Especially noticeable was the absence of W. J. Palmer, vice-president of the Carnation Society, whom we fully and fondly expected to be present to urge a large attendance at Toronto. As it was, nearly all present promised to go to Toronto and we shall have ten or more as Buffalo's delegation. Will there be a more nearby convention to attend in the near future? We doubt it. Toronto will treat all visitors most hospitably. And then there are two establishments in the neighborhood well worth a longer trip to see. There is John H. Dunlop's model place, where roses are grown to perfection, and twenty miles from Toronto is the mammoth Dale place, where carnations, roses and violets are grown by the acre, and there are lots of other things on the northern shore of Lake Ontario. Let's all go and enjoy it.

Greenhouse Heating.

THE MARKET FOR PIPE.

The condition of things in the metal trade is such that it is wise for any grower who needs a quantity of pipe to be looking about for his supply. The mills are booked up with orders to carry them past the season when growers will want the pipe delivered and it does not look as though pipe would be, at any time this summer, cheaper than at present. Indeed, the prospects are rather that there will be an advance as the season progresses. One of the largest jobbers of pipe in the United States, who supplies many greenhouse owners, says that it is now, in the dullest part of the year so far as actual deliveries are concerned, impossible to get all the pipe needed of 1-inch, 1¼-inch, 1½-inch and 2-inch to meet actual demand, to say nothing of carrying any considerable stock on hand, as is usually done at this season. He advises all buyers to place orders now, or at least make known the quantities which will be required during the season, so that their needs may be provided for.

BOILER CAPACITY.

Will you please tell me if a No. 5 Kroeschell boiler will heat three greenhouses 28x100; four feet at the sides and twelve feet to the ridge? The sides and ends are exposed. I want to heat with hot water. Should I take two leads from the boiler or one? I want to keep my houses at 52 degrees when it is 20 degrees below zero outdoors. Will a thirty horse-power steam boiler heat four houses of the same size? H. E. R.

The three greenhouses will require a total of about 4,000 square feet of radiation to maintain the temperature you desire, without forcing. While the No. 5 Kroeschell boiler is rated at 4,000 square feet of radiation and will take care of this amount under conditions stated in your inquiry, still the writer would advise considering the next size larger boiler, namely a No. 6, capacity 4,500 square feet of radiation, which would do the work more easily and with less attention in the way of firing. This he would especially recommend since the difference in price between the two boilers is but $20.

Replying to your question as to the capacity of a thirty horse-power steam boiler, would say that a boiler of this size would be the proper size for three houses, 20x100, maintaining a temperature of 52 degrees in weather 20 degrees below zero, but would not be sufficiently large for four houses of that size.

In reference to the main leads, would state that the number of leads will be determined by the positions; that is, if your houses are so arranged that the leads will be side by side, we would advise running from the boiler with one large flowpipe of sufficient capacity for the work. Should your boiler be located in the center of the three houses we would advise two flows. The same may be said of the main returns. It is also more economical to install, as well as more practical, one large main flow and return where this is possible.

A UNIQUE NATURAL PRODUCT.

One of nature's most wonderful and unique products is asbestos, a material now largely used for covering greenhouse boilers and flowpipes to conserve heat. Prior to 1850, it was looked upon principally as a curiosity, although Charlemagne (Roman emperor from 800 to 814 A. D.) is said to have had a table cloth made of asbestos, which he cleaned by throwing into fire.

There are two varieties of commercial asbestos, known as amphibole and chrysotile. The former is used only to a comparatively small extent, as the fibers are short and without tensile strength and are, therefore, not suitable for manufacturing many of the asbestos products. Amphibole is used to some extent in cements, but is not well adapted even for that purpose. Chrysotile, on the other hand, has a strong and silky fiber, which adapts it for such materials as asbestos fabrics, household utensils, theater curtains, clothing for firemen, etc.

In Germany, asbestos is known as steinflachs (stone flax) and the miners of Quebec give it quite as expressive a name —pierre coton (cotton stone).

Asbestos is mined in open pits, similar to stone quarries, and although it is found in all parts of the world, the mines in Quebec, Canada, are the most famous, yielding eighty-five per cent of the world's supply of chrysotile. Probably the largest of these mines is that owned by the H. W. Johns-Manville Co., of New York. In 1879 the output of the Quebec mines was 300 tons, which has steadily increased year by year to 50,000 tons in 1905.

RETURNS TOO SMALL.

Will you kindly assist us in locating the trouble with our hot water heating system? On the north side of the greenhouse are three 2-inch flows supplying six 1¼-inch returns. On the south side are two 3-inch flows supplying four 1¼-inch returns. The flows were laid side by side on stringers fastened to the legs of the benches. The returns were fastened one over the other to the legs of the benches. Last summer we noticed the benches had settled, so we tore out the arrangement and supported the flows on concrete blocks and the returns on uprights fastened to the blocks. Here is the trouble: Two north side flows are hot from end to end, while the center flow is hot for ten feet at the boiler end and for forty feet at the farther end, but cold in the center. Of the six returns, two are merely warm, while four are hot at the boiler end. The same is true of the four returns on the south side. The air pipes on each side are open and go out at the ridge, which is ten feet high. The boiler, a No. 7 Furman, is rated for double the work it is doing. There is a closed expansion tank in the workshop eight feet above the boiler. G. F. B.

If I understand the arrangement of pipes correctly you have a much greater capacity in the flow than in the returns, which is exactly the reverse of what it should be. It is probable that the lack of heat in the risers is due to impeded flow in the returns, because of the great friction, the result of their small size and the consequent throttling of the flow of water in the risers. Then, too, the pipe which does not heat well may have a kink in it which causes an impaired flow. Look carefully to the alignment of the pipes and see that they are free from kinks and have a uniform grade. Tap a small airvalve into the dead pipe and open it as a test for air from time to time, if adjusting the alignment does not remedy the difficulty. L. C. C.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

A year ago the florists of Illinois, under the impression that they should be awake to the modern spirit of progress and have a state association, called a meeting which was held in Peoria, where many men who were representatives in the culture of flowers over the state assembled and the Illinois Florists' Association sprang into being. A. I. Knowles, Frank Washburn, Arthur J. Graves, of this city, and J. W. Adams, of Normal, were there and believing that this city would be an ideal place for its second meeting urged upon the new organization to meet in this city next year. They presented their cause so well that in spite of several other invitations theirs was accepted.

After the delegates returned to this city they called a meeting of the local florists and nurserymen and formed the Florists' Club of this city with A. I. Knowles president. This organization will have charge of the annual convention which will be held here February 18 and 19. The Illinois hotel will be headquarters. The Business Men's Association will provide the convention hall for the meeting at some central point in the city near the hotel.

A big banquet will be given at the Illinois hotel on the night of February 19 and visits will be arranged to the greenhouses about the city.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, is president of the state association.

LOWVILLE, KY.—F. B. Pfister will, in the spring, build another greenhouse 22x 100, for carnations.

THE REVIEW will send Herrington's Chrysanthemum Book, with complete cultural details, on receipt of 50 cents.

re two 3-inch flows supplying four 1¼ nch returns. The flows were laid side y side on stringers fastened to the legs f the benches. The returns were fast ned one over the other to the legs of he benches. Last summer we noticed he benches had settled, so we tore out the arrangement and supported the flows on concrete blocks and the returns on uprights fastened to the blocks. Here is the trouble: Two north side flows are hot from end to end, while the center flow is hot for ten feet at the boiler end and for forty feet at the farther end, but cold in the center. Of the six returns, two are merely warm, while four are hot at the boiler end. The same is true of the four returns on the south side. The air pipes on each side are open and go out at the ridge, which is ten feet high. The boiler, a No. 7 Furman, is rated for double the work it is doing. There is a closed expansion tank in the workshop eight feet above the boiler. G. F. B.

If I understand the arrangement of pipes correctly you have a much greater capacity in the flow than in the returns, which is exactly the reverse of what it should be. It is probable that the lack of heat in the risers is due to impeded flow in the returns, because of the great friction, the result of their small size and the consequent throttling of the flow of water in the risers. Then, too, the pipe which does not heat well may have a kink in it which causes an impaired flow. Look carefully to the alignment of the pipes and see that they are free from kinks and have a uniform grade. Tap a small airvalve into the dead pipe and open it as a test for air from time to time, if adjusting the alignment does not remedy the difficulty. L. C. C.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

A year ago the florists of Illinois, under the impression that they should be awake to the modern spirit of progress and have a state association, called a meeting which was held in Peoria, where many men who were representatives in the culture of flowers over the state assembled and the Illinois Florists' Association sprang into being. A. I. Knowles, Frank Washburn, Arthur J. Graves, of this city, and J. W. Adams, of Normal, were there and believing that this city would be an ideal place for its second meeting urged upon the new organization to meet in this city next year. They presented their cause so well that in spite of several other invitations theirs was accepted.

After the delegates returned to this city they called a meeting of the local florists and nurserymen and formed the Florists' Club of this city with A. I. Knowles president. This organization will have charge of the annual convention which will be held here February 18 and 19. The Illinois hotel will be headquarters. The Business Men's Association will provide the convention hall for the meeting at some central point in the city near the hotel.

A big banquet will be given at the Illinois hotel on the night of February 19 and visits will be arranged to the greenhouses about the city.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, is president of the state association.

LOWVILLE, KY.—F. B. Pfister will, in the spring, build another greenhouse 22x100, for carnations.

THE REVIEW will send Herrington's Chrysanthemum Book, with complete cultural details, on receipt of 50 cents.

The annual business meeting and election of officers of the North Shore Horticultural Society took place last Friday evening, President McGregor in the chair. Reports from officers and the executive committee of 1906 were read and accepted. Herbert Clark was elected an honorary member. He now has the distinction of being a charter member and an honorary member. Balloting for officers for 1907 had the following result: President, James McGregor; vice-president, Thomas Jack; treasurer, John Baker; recording secretary, James Salter; financial secretary, Herbert Shaw; executive committee, James B. Dow, John Desmond, Frank C. Cole, Rev. Fr. W. F. Powers and Rev. C. A. Lincoln.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The weather conditions have been rain and warmer, and then more rain for the last week. It is still raining. Shrubbery is beginning to show signs of life. The buds of many of the early sorts are already pushing out and crocuses are in bloom in several places.

Trade conditions are about average, using all stock which is coming in. Roses are still high in price, ranging from $6 to $18 per hundred. Carnations are more plentiful, with enough bulb stock of all kinds. Good Sprengeri is not plentiful, but all other greens are abundant. The retail stores complain that the high price which stock in general has maintained since before the holidays has extinguished the small trade, leaving them depending largely on funeral work and decorations.

Various Notes.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. has been receiving quantities of freesia and violets.

Ernest Zieger, who has been confined to his home on account of illness, is again at his place of business.

It was thought that the committee appointed by the Pittsburg Florists' Club to arrange for a smoker for last week must have either died or left the country, as nothing has been heard of either the committee or the smoker; but they got back this minute and wish the smoker announced for Tuesday, January 22, when they promise to make up for their tardiness.

are what you want to do your figuring on. When a firm talks boiler economies, make them prove-up by showing you a boiler actually at work, making these economies—not only making them today, but one that has been making them year in and year out. We base our estimate of what our boilers will do for you, on what they have done for others. Corrugated Firebox or Sectional, just as you like—either is a boiler of economy.

To have both a light house and a strong, durable house is a difficult combination. When you remove shading members you remove supporting or stiffening members. U-Bar greenhouses are the best greenhouses built because the lightness of construction is not at the expense of durability or rigidity. No other construction combines both sashbar and iron rafter in one, while casting only the amount of shade of the sashbar alone. First, Let Us Tell You What Kind of a Trussed House ours is, then if you want to go into its every detail, our catalog covers the entire thing, with sketches, cuts, and good readable descriptions taking you to the meat of the thing at once.

Section showing trussing, the cast-iron V gutter with drip gutter.

It's an easy enough matter to truss here and there through your house, but when the whole, standing-up, staying-togetherness of your house depends on the trussing, then you need expert engineering experience. We have that kind of experience, and as a result turn out the lightest and strongest truss house made. A house with absolutely rigid roof bars that easily stands the strain of a 175-lb. man swinging on them at any point, without the slightest perceptible giving. We have not reduced the trussing to mere ¼-inch wires, but ⅜-inch and 5-16-inch steel with ⅝-inch round purlins. We have a stronger house, and still it's lighter than any other, just because we truss at every sixth bar instead of at every fourth, while strutting at every other one instead of at every bar. For the truss house the sashbar is 1⅛-inch x 2¼-inch, in the column house it is 1⅜-inch x 2½-inch, making the truss-bar narrower but deeper. Our truss house is constructed on tried out, tested mechanical principles. You can make no mistake in buying it—Send for the catalog.

You will have noticed that all metal goods have advanced during the fall, and prices are still advancing. We foresaw this and secured a liberal stock of boiler-plate before the rise. While this stock lasts, we will sell you a boiler at last year's prices, but when this material is used up we will be obliged to advance our prices, the same as others have done, and such advance will be at least the amounts stated above, ranging from $23.00 on No. 1 to $62.00 on No. 14.

1906 prices can be secured by ordering a boiler NOW. You need not take the boiler or pay for it until you want it.

We could write pages on the superior qualities of our boilers, but after all "THE PROOF of the pudding is in the eating." and here it is: Sold in 1906 boilers to 150 new establishments to heat 2,158,000 sq. ft. of glass. If you want to know more about our boilers, please write us, and we will refer you to users in your neighborhood. Our boilers can be seen from ocean to ocean and from the Gulf of Mexico to and including British Columbia.

Greenhouse Heating.

A HEATING RECORD.

I have two houses, each 23x100, in which I grow lettuce and general stock. I keep a night temperature 50 to 52 degrees. They are heated with hot water. There are two flows in each house, along the purlins. One 3½-inch pipe supplies six 2-inch pipes under the outside benches and one 3-inch flow supplying four 2-inch pipes under the inside benches. The outlet from each house is separate into the boiler in 5-inch pipe. I had a special boiler made to order that has proved itself beyond my expectations. In the winter of 1905-6 I used thirty-one tons of coal at $1.90 and ten cords of 3-foot wood worth about $2.50 per cord. This I thought very reasonable. The circulation is perfect. Last winter in moderate weather, that is, not windy and outside temperature 20 degrees or so above zero, I would leave the boiler nine hours with a variation of but 3 degrees.

Ten days ago I was called to Cleveland overnight. The outside temperature was 46 degrees at 2:40 p. m., when I left the boiler, with a gradually sinking mercury. There being no men about, I left instructions that the boiler should not be touched until next morning. My wife, on my return next evening, reported that at 7 p. m. it became quite windy and by 9:30 was freezing, with stormy outlook. When she awoke at 6 a. m. the outside temperature was 26 degrees and the greenhouses were 47 degrees. I think this is a record for fifteen hours and twenty minutes without attention. I would like to hear from anyone who can beat it. S. C. TEMPLIN.

BOMBAYREED JARDINIERES

Are What The Florists Are Using Nowadays!

No. 7—Japanese.

WHY?

Because they wear. They stand exposure to sunlight and moisture.

They are not made of grass or split willow, but from the genuine solid bamboo reeds, imported direct from India for our own use, which makes them admirable for decorating and hard usage.

The BOMBAYREED JARDINIERES are quick sellers, too, because they are extensively advertised in the popular magazines. We create a big demand.

They are by far the most artistic and serviceable jardinieres on the market today.

We offer liberal trade discounts and prepay freight on wholesale orders. All our jardinieres are made in nine styles and in all colors. Sizes from four inches up. Flexible pot covers in extra large sizes. Our prices are low and inviting.

We will send you by express prepaid an eight-inch sample in any style or color. When you get it try their lasting qualities and order, if you are satisfied.

Window boxes—all sizes, metal lined.

Don't forget that our Foliage Green colors have made the hit.

Wholesale Growers of Cut Flowers

51 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO

OUR CARNATION NOVELTIES FOR 1907

Winsor, White Enchantress and Helen M. Gould

ONE way to judge carnations is to see them on the exhibition tables. A better and more convincing way is to see them growing; therefore we cordially invite all carnation growers to visit us and judge for themselves regarding the superiority of the above named sorts.

Our carnation houses are at SCARBOROUGH-ON-HUDSON (not Tarrytown). Friends who desire to visit us can take the N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. from New York. Trains leave there every half hour. Scarborough is the first station north of Tarrytown. Our grounds adjoin the station, and the greenhouses are about five minutes' walk from the station.

We are growing 25,000 PLANTS OF WINSOR for cut flowers alone, for the New York market this season, which shows the faith we have in it. This will also enable visitors to see it growing in quantity, and, besides that will give us enough plants to get a great abundance of fine, healthy cuttings without over-propagating. We have already booked a large quantity among the large growers, and anticipate for this variety the largest sale of any new carnation that has ever been distributed, as large growers who have seen it are enthusiastic in regard to its value. Those who have seen it have immediately placed large orders for it, so we recommend those who have not ordered to place order without delay, so as to ensure early delivery.

For full description of these three valuable novelties, see our Wholesale Price List.

Wholesale Prices, Rooted Cuttings, Spring 1907

WINSOR. Soft silvery pink. The best color, best keeper, best shipper, best seller—best every way. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

WHITE ENCHANTRESS. Has the large size, long stem, productive habit of Enchantress, but it is pure white. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

HELEN M. GOULD. A beautiful sport of Enchantress. Ground color lovely shade of silvery pink, with very fine pencilings of carmine, making an exceedingly exquisite combination. While on close observation this variety is variegated, the general effect is one beautiful tone of dark pink. Exceedingly valuable, because it combines the earliness, freedom, long stem, and large size of Enchantress, giving another color possessing all the other desirable qualities of Enchantress. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

BEACON. Orange-scarlet. A vigorous, healthy grower, of ideal habit. A profuse bloomer, with long stems. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

ARISTOCRAT. Cerise-pink. Will be planted largely in place of Lawson. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

MELODY. Daybreak sport of Lawson, about the same color as Enchantress, but much brighter, and does not fade like Enchantress. Also a much better keeper and shipper. Those who grow the Lawson varieties exclusively will find this very valuable and desirable, because it gives an improved Enchantress color, which is so popular, and at the same time can be grown in the same house with the other Lawsons. An extra fine thing in every way and in great demand. A great addition to the Lawson class. $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000.

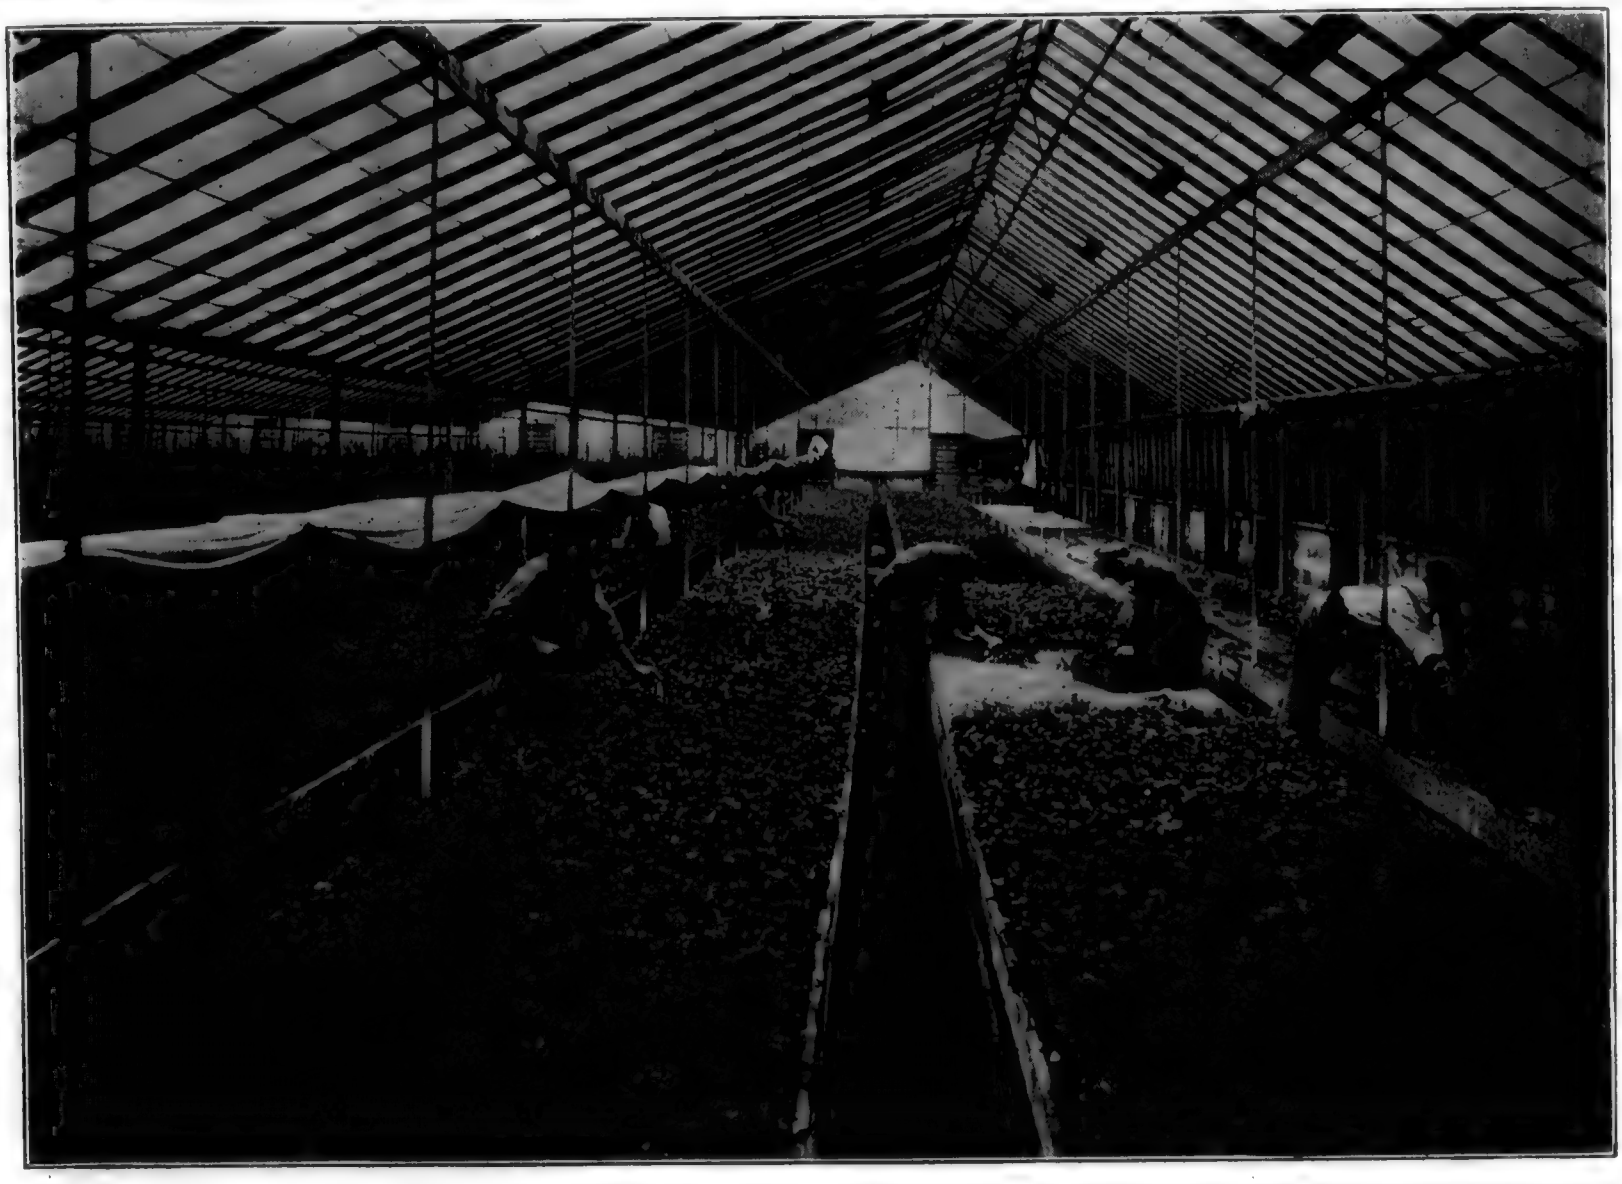
ROSE-PINK ENCHANTRESS. A sport of Enchantress. Color, dark rose-pink. $7.00 per 100; $60.00 per 1000.

WHITE PERFECTION. A novelty of 1906, and a variety for which there is a great demand this season. A third larger than Lady Bountiful and a more perfect flower. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000.

VICTORY. Scarlet. This is giving great satisfaction, being a free blooming, profitable scarlet. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000.

RED LAWSON. A fine red. Our stock of this is superior to many stocks of Red Lawson that we have seen. $4.00 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

VARIEGATED LAWSON. The most productive of the variegated sorts. A favorite. Outblooms Mrs. M. A. Patten. $4.00 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.



WHITE LAWSON. An excellent white. $4.00 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

ENCHANTRESS. $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000.

MRS. M. A. PATTEN. $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000.

MRS. THOS. W. LAWSON. $3.00 per 100; $20.00 per 1000.

F. R. PIERSON CO., TARRYTOWN-ON-HUDSON, NEW YORK.

We are not only the largest growers of Cut Flowers in the United States (1,500,000 feet of modern glass devoted to Roses and Carnations) but we are the largest producers of young stock for the trade.

You want the ribbons on your flowers to add to the beauty and effect.

DO THEY? Pine Tree Ribbons do, for they are manufactured with that especial end. In the skein, the raw silk is dyed to match or blend with the prominent flowers and foliage. Then when woven, attention is given that they shall be smooth, even, and firm to the touch. In finishing, care is taken that they shall be lustrous, brilliant.

Send us a sample order. Compare PINE TREE RIBBONS with the ribbons you now use. The prices should be less, or the quality superior. Either way, if they are not satisfactory, return them.

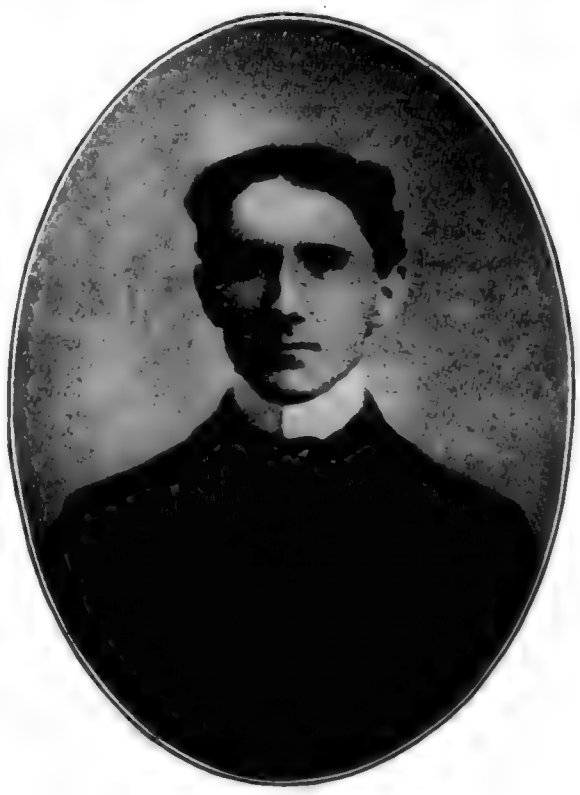
The TORONTO CONVENTION

The American Carnation Society Holds Its Sixteenth Annual Meeting and Exhibition.

President, Fred H. Lemon, Richmond, Ind.
Vice-president, Peter Bisset, Washington, D. C.
Secretary, Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa.
Treasurer, Fred E. Dorner, Lafayette, Ind.

NEXT MEETING PLACE, WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY, 1908.



The American marines who landed on British soil at Kingston were repulsed by a volley of vehement rhetoric, but the invasion of Canada by the American Carnation Society has been consummated with an exchange of compliments which has added to our long cherished hope that some day there may be no boundary line between us.

It is the first time the Carnation Society has crossed the border, although many of its stanchest members are Canadian carnation growers. Toronto is one of the pleasantest cities on the American continent, and her florists are among the most hospitable men on earth. They were able to make arrangements which erased the line usually drawn by the customs authorities, and the shipments of carnations for exhibition, bearing the official tag of the American Carnation Society, were passed as though no such thing as tariff red tape ever existed. All the Toronto craftsmen had put their shoulders to the wheel, under the leadership of President Dunlop, and with united effort had perfected arrangements which left nothing to be desired in the way of conveniences for staging an excellent exhibition, or for the purposes of the meetings of the society.

It is probable that the severe cold wave which swept over the country two days before the hour of starting for the convention had something to do with cutting down the attendance, which was, nevertheless, close to 300 on Wednesday afternoon and fully as large as at recent meetings of the society, showing that the local people had turned out in full force, for there are not so many growers in the environs of Toronto as in the territory adjacent to Boston and Chicago. All the wheel horses of the society were present, except William Scott, Peter Fisher and John Birnie, who were ill. Far away Denver had three, Boston and New York sent good delegations and Chicago was better represented than at the Boston meeting last year.

It was 8 degrees below zero at Toronto on Wednesday and all trains were delayed, the Boston party being five hours behind schedule. The result was that many shipments arrived too late for competition, in spite of the hour's grace given by virtue of the official announcement, a fortnight ago, that exhibitors could have until 2 p. m. for staging. Nearly all stock traveled well and good packing caused everything to come through without loss by frost.

It was noted that the varieties shown were again practically all new sorts. In recent years the exhibitions of the Carnation Society have no longer been contests of different growers to see who could produce the best blooms of standard varieties, but have become displays of far more interesting and important character, namely, exhibitions of the best blooms of the varieties shortly to occupy space on the growers' benches by the displacement of inferior sorts. The raising of carnation seedlings has become the pastime of hundreds of small growers. Dozens of these seedlings were shown in small quantities, not for competition but for comparison with the splendid sorts which are being sent out this year. Some fine things are among them. So far has the development of the carnation progressed that it takes a genuinely good thing to stand up before the critical inspection accorded exhibits at the annual meeting of the American Carnation Society.

Fred H. Lemon.

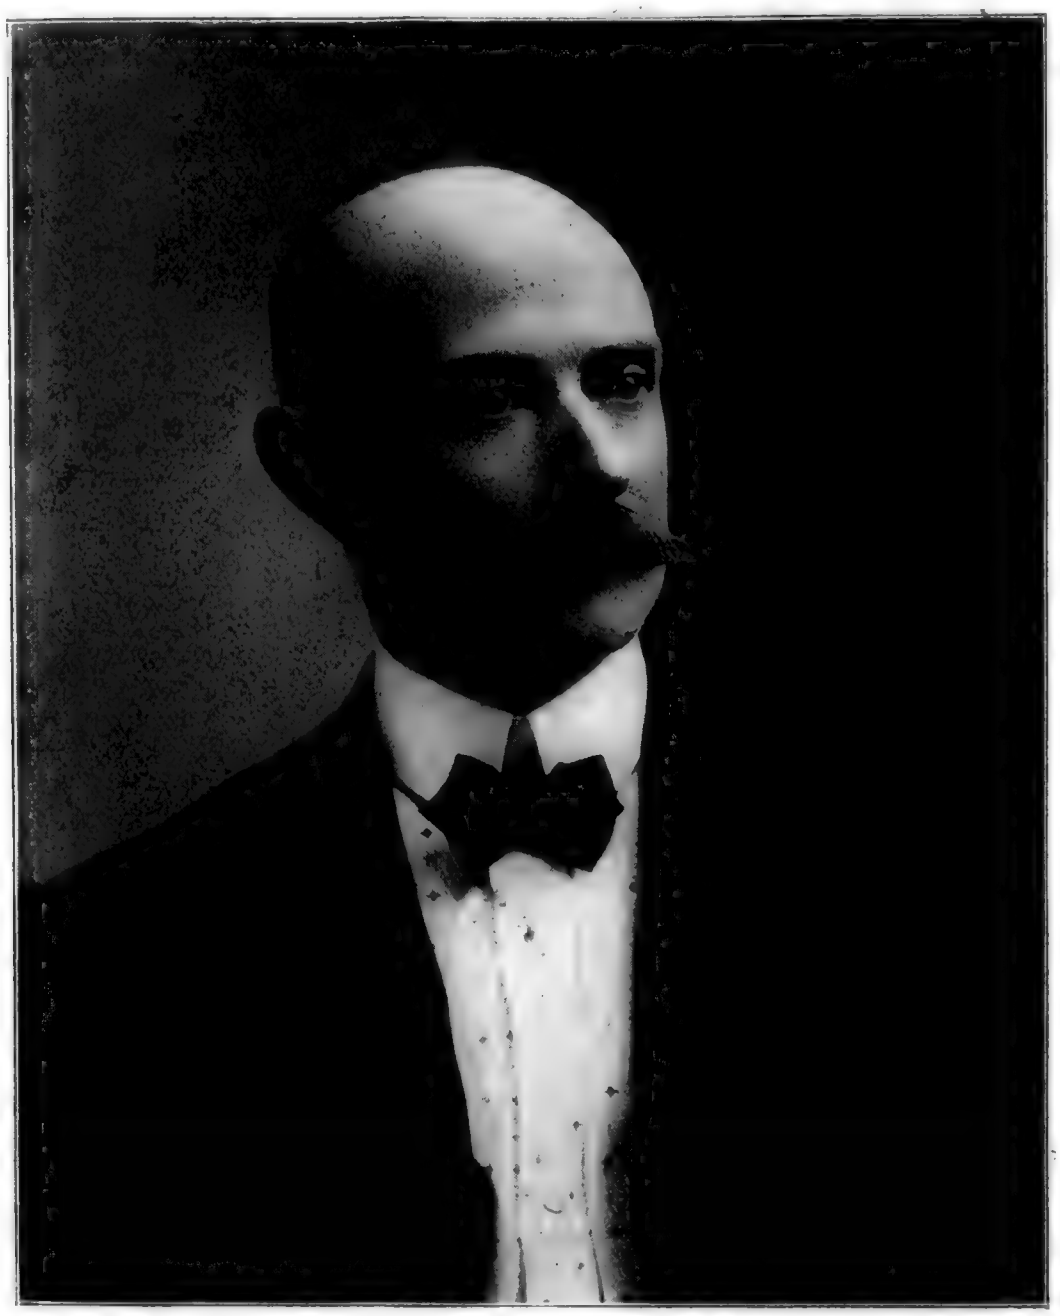
(President-elect American Carnation Society.)

The exhibition possibly was not quite so large as that at Boston last year and at Chicago the year before, but it nevertheless was a large and interesting show. The quality was good throughout, although not so fine as it would have been had not the whole country suffered for weeks under the debilitating influence of warm, damp atmosphere and sunless skies.

The management of the exhibition was in the hands of George H. Mills, who handled his task to the satisfaction of all. The exhibition hall, the assembly room in the city building, was excellently adapted to the purpose, stock keeping well. The business meetings were excellently housed under the same roof.

President John H. Dunlop proved to be one of the most capable presiding officers the society ever has had and the business meetings were conducted after a fashion to set a pace for his successors.

First Business Session.



It was not until Wednesday evening that the society got down to business, with a crowded house, the exhibition hall also being well filled at the time by Toronto's best people, whose interest proved the oft-repeated assertion that a visit of the Carnation Society gives the sale of the carnation a tremendous impetus in the favored city.

The society was eloquently welcomed by Lieutenant Governor Clarke, whose address was full of sentiment and brotherly feeling. The mayor, a cousin of L. Coatsworth, of Chicago, was unavoidably absent, but the second of Chairman Graham, of the Civic Committee, was as warm as even the mayor could have made it. Responses were made by C. W. Ward, of Queens, and F. H. Lemon, of Richmond. Mr. Ward paid tribute to Canada's vastness, her resources, her future, and what it means to those engaged in floriculture. He said the spirit of progress as exemplified in President Dunlop and the other Toronto florists indicates the manifest destiny of the Dominion. Mr. Lemon spoke of the gratitude of the society for the warmth of hospitality extended and of the community of interests between Canada and the United States as between all carnation growers. He also said a word for the absent members, many of whom were detained by illness.

President John H. Dunlop then read his annual address, introducing it with a few words of welcome on his own account and for the Canadian florists. The members were invited to visit all local growers. The address was as follows:

President's Address.

It is with more than ordinary pleasure I welcome you to this, the sixteenth annual convention of this progressive and important organization. At our last convention, at Boston, words of welcome were extended by his worship the mayor, by the secretary of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society (in the absence of its president), the president of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, and replied to by members of this society; men who have by their untiring zeal endeared themselves to us and who have by perseverance and industry advanced to that high plane which few of us hope to attain. I referred to the Boston welcome on account of the historical connection and the traditional history of that good old commonwealth. But you are welcomed tonight to one of the newer or more modern cities; one that is only beginning to feel the impulse of commercial activity and has not that traditional history of which our last convention city could boast, but none the less hearty and loyal. Toronto welcomes you with the true British hospitality that is ever found where the Anglo-Saxon tongue is spoken. Let me here express this wish: May the ties that bind the two greatest English-speaking nations, of which Canada is a part and I may say the brightest gem in the British crown, never be severed but be welded more closely together in the bonds of love, esteem, friendship and commercial union.

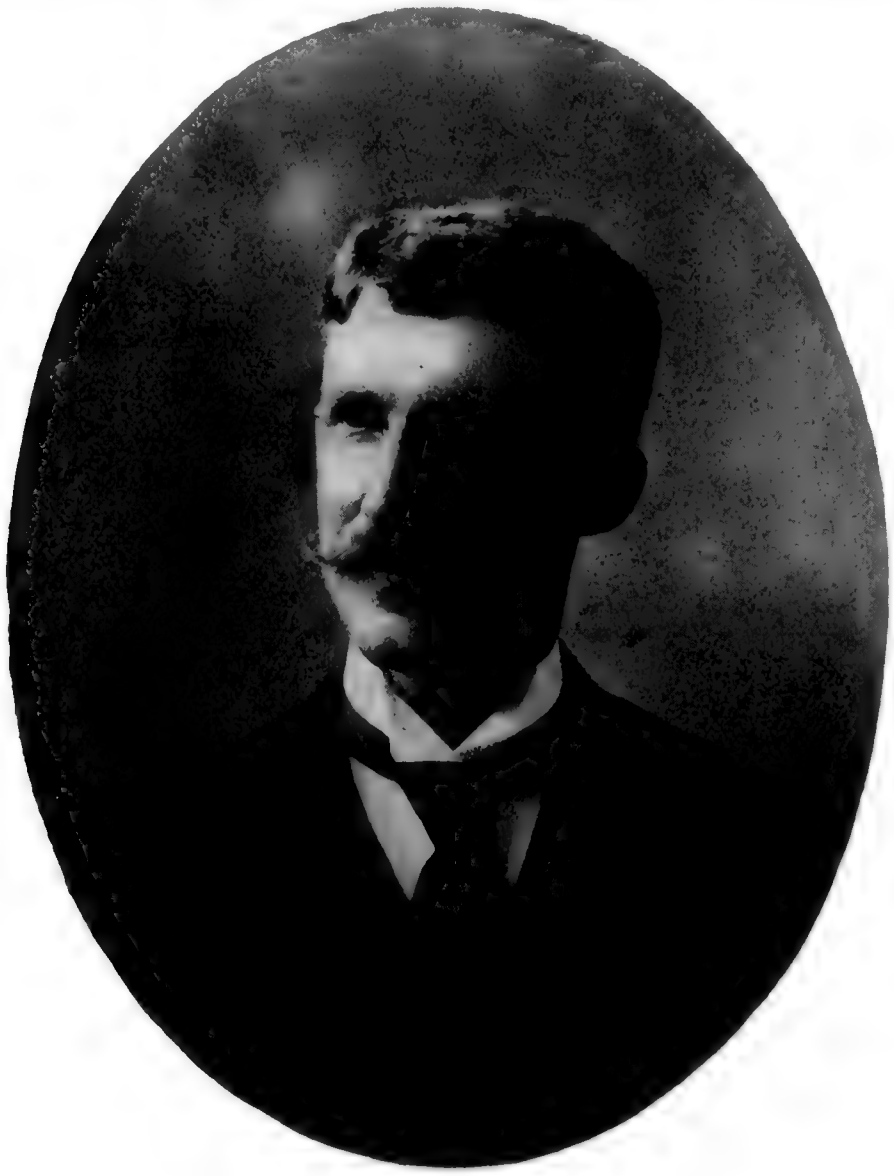
We feel highly honored in having you with us on this the first time that the society has met outside of the United States; more especially so as the membership from the Dominion has been very small. It was not the numerical strength of the Canadian members that brought the convention to Toronto, but the good feeling, the magnanimous spirit and the desire to assist in showing the people of this country the progress and improvement that has taken place in the development of the divine flower.



It is of the greatest importance that the educational feature of such an exhibition of carnations as we have in the exhibition hall should be taken advantage of, not only by those who are growing them, but also by the public, who are our best critics, for it is they who are our support and to them we look for approval of our product. Certainly, if the public do not patronize our wares, no matter how much we cherish any particular variety, it is valueless. It is them we have to please and they whom we should encourage to see the flowers in all stages of development at our greenhouses, and to express their opinion on what we are producing, criticising as it were, thus becoming familiar with the varieties by name, color, etc., and the public like to be consulted and have a knowledge of the different varieties.

We have long looked forward to this time, when we could present such a magnificent show and bring to our city the men who have been instrumental in producing such grand flowers; men who are revered by every lover of the divine flower and whose names will ever be remembered as those who, by their love and devotion to their chosen calling, have given to the world the best that has ever been.

There are not many things that I can speak of in this address that would be considered new, as we on this side feel ourselves students and desire to be taught. But there is one matter of particular importance to all, and I hope that we can find a solution, or formulate a plan by which we can put it in operation in an intelligent and practical way. It is: What should qualify a new variety for the American Carnation Society's certificate of merit? What has been said and done at previous conventions along this line has hardly been satisfactory, or has been found to be defective in some particular. At our last convention at Boston a committee was Peter Bisset, Vice-president Elect American Carnation Society.

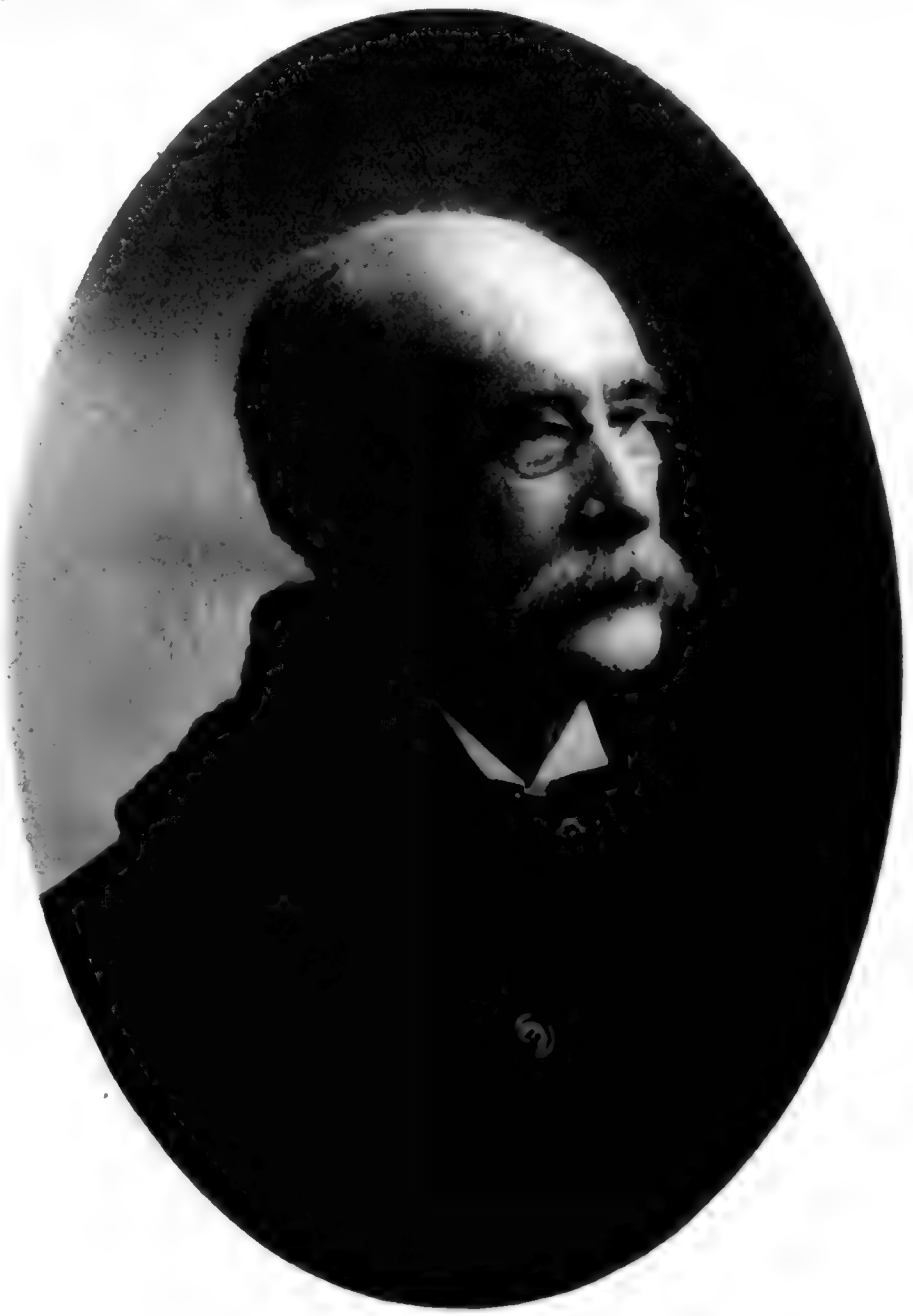
Edward Dale.
(President Toronto Gardeners' and Florists' Association.)



Another matter that should receive our attention is the increasing work of the secretary. With the growth of the society his work has increased in a much greater ratio. During the short time I have held office as your president I know the amount of correspondence must be considerable, as from my end he has had reason to know we were working. The compiling of the premium list, soliciting advertisements, etc., the compiling of the annual report and the preparatory work for each convention is considerable. It might be well for this meeting to consider the question and suggest some means of lightening the work, either by granting an assistant for a stated time each year, or the purchase of labor-saving appliances and not to exceed a certain sum to be named by the society. Above all, let us recognize our secretary's ability and make him feel by our words and actions that we appreciate his services. Nothing makes one feel more energetic than to know he has your sympathy and support.

This convention will have served its purpose if it stimulates a still greater interest in the divine flower in our broad Dominion. We have not been as quick to recognize the importance of the carnation as our American brethren and for that reason the development has not been as great as we would desire, and we hope that in visiting the greenhouses of this section where carnations are grown that you will criticise our work and not be slow to point out our mistakes. We note with interest the popularity of the carnation in England, also that the American varieties are being named to bring in a report, but it was received at the last afternoon session and too late to receive that attention a question of so much importance deserves. It should be considered both from the originator's and the buyer's standpoint; both should be considered. The man who devotes his time and brains to the hybridizing of carnations should receive every encouragement from the society; also the grower who buys the new varieties largely from the description of the originator and from the awards that have been made, both from this society and the various exhibitions at which the variety was shown.

It may have scored high, as seen at the various exhibitions, but there may be some of the most essential points of a first-class commercial variety lacking. The question is, how are we to arrive at a solution? How are we to ascertain if the variety contains the points that go to make up a profitable variety for the average commercial grower? These should be carefully considered, and when the certificate is awarded it should be a guaranty that these points have been ascertained and proven. The more closely we guard our awards, the more closely we scrutinize these points, so much more will the trade generally rely confidently on the endorsement of this society and it should enhance the value of any variety having the endorsement of this society.

But let us guard jealously the awarding of this certificate, and let it be all that the name implies. We know how closely every award is made; how closely every point is scrutinized in the old land and as a result the award is accordingly prized by the recipient, for he knows his product has been deserving or it would not be awarded.

George Vair.
(Prominent Horticulturist, active in the Toronto Electoral District Society.)

largely grown, and from the comments in the horticultural press the varieties are giving general satisfaction.

Trusting that your stay with us may be both pleasant and profitable, and thanking you for the honor conferred on me by electing me your president, before concluding I wish to thank the gentlemen composing the different committees who have worked so harmoniously and zealously in completing the arrangements for this convention.

The report of Secretary Herr was presented, and adopted, as follows:

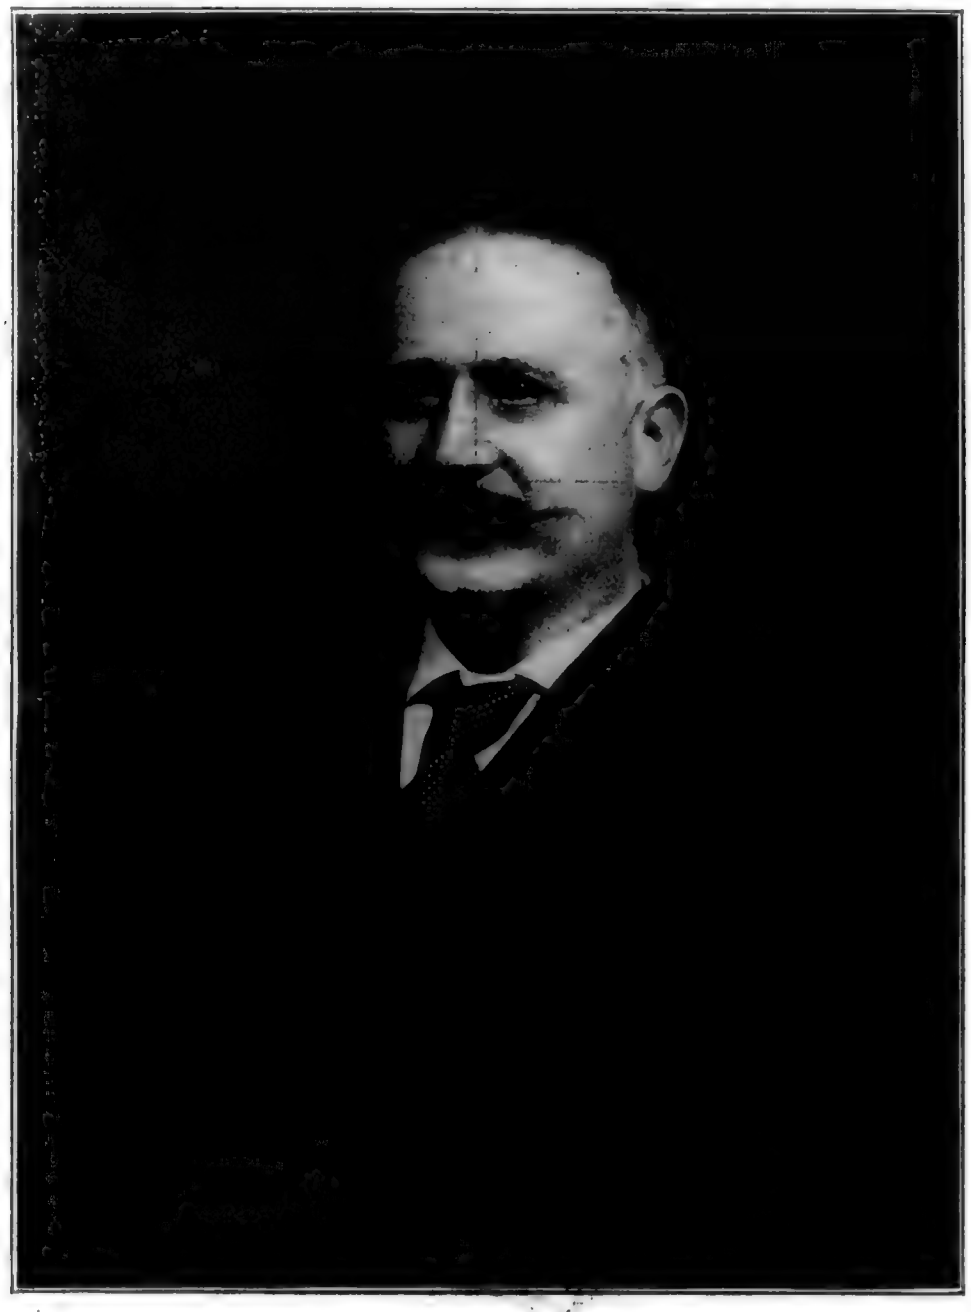
Secretary's Report.

Your secretary reports having issued the usual printed matter during the year and mailing the same as issued.

There were two deaths reported to the secretary during the year, those of Lewis Ullrich, of Tiffin, O., and J. L. Dillon, Bloomsburg, Pa., the first that have been reported during my term of office. Mr. Valentine, of Denver, several years ago made some remark about a suitable offering being sent in such cases. There was no action taken in the matter and I would suggest that an offering be adopted as representative of this society, and upon similar conditions arising again, the secretary be empowered to wire a florist in the city of the deceased, to send such offering with the society card.

Like most human beings, your secretary is subject to errors, lapse of memory and the losing of important documents, perhaps more so than the most of them. The last year three of these errors happened to get into our premium list. First, the substitution of the name of Eugene Dailledouze for that of Wm. Scott, as judge; second, the use of the name of O. R. King Co., Ltd., instead of the King Construction Co., in the award of a special; and last but not least, the loss of copy for a half page ad. and a $10 special, and the non-appearance of either in the premium list. When my attention was called to this, I offered to have adv. and premium both printed on a postal card and send it out to every member, at my own expense, but this offer was not accepted.

The advertisements in the premium list amount to $231.50. These advertisers are worthy of your patronage. This is the only means whereby we can secure the revenue necessary for the expense of this society, expenses that are increasing faster than the membership. To secure these advertisements your secretary wrote almost 300 personal letters, in addition to the printed notices sent all members, and the showing does not measure up with the amount of time and labor expended.



Every member of this society who has anything to advertise should use this premium list; it is not money thrown away and is the only contribution the society asks, aside from your annual dues of $2.

Your president, Mr. Dunlop, has given the secretary much valuable assistance during the year and has certainly well earned the honor attached to his office.

The report of Treasurer Dorner was presented, and adopted, as follows:

Hermann Simmers.

(Chairman Executive Committee, Toronto Horticultural Society.)

Invitations and Nominations.

In the unavoidable absence of John Birnie, of West Hoboken, N. J., his paper, "Are There Too Many New Varieties Introduced?" was read by Hermann Simmers. It appears in full on another page of this issue. Discussion was opened by W. N. Rudd, of Mount Greenwood, Ill., but was not concluded at this session, although it was given as the opinion of several speakers that the society's certificate granted to blooms on the exhibition table should not be taken as determining commercial values.

Invitations for 1908 being in order, the invitation of Washington given originally at Boston last year was renewed by Wm. Weber, of Oakland, Md., and C. W. Ward, of Queens. An invitation to Indianapolis was presented by John Bertermann, Fred Dorner and E. G. Gillett, the latter of Cincinnati.

Officers were nominated, as follows: For president, Wm. F. Gude, Washington; J. R. Freeman, Washington; Fred Lemon, Richmond, Ind. For vice-president, Peter Bisset, Washington; A. F. J. Baur, Indianapolis. For secretary, Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa. For treasurer, F. E. Dorner, Lafayette, Ind. For judge, W. N. Rudd, Mount Greenwood, Ill.

The reading of the paper by Wm. Gammage and the report of the awards by the judges concluded the session Wednesday evening. Both appear in full in this issue.

The Awards.

The following were the awards in Class A, each color calling for vases of 100 blooms each:

White, Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., first on White Perfection; Jas. D. Cockcroft, Northport, N. Y., second on Georgia.

Enchantress shade of pink, Chicago Carnation Co., first on Enchantress; Strafford Flower Farm, Overbrook, Pa., second on Enchantress.

Lawson shade of pink, Chicago Carnation Co., first on Aristocrat; John E. Haines, Bethlehem, Pa., second on Pink Imperial.

Scott shade of pink, F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., first on Winsor; John Reimels, Woodhaven, N. Y., second on Winona.

Scarlet, Cottage Gardens Co., Queens, N. Y., first on Robt. Craig; also second on Beacon. Other exhibitors were: The Chicago Carnation Co., with Red Riding Hood; Guttman & Weber, New York, with Victory; John E. Haines, with J. E. Haines, and Strafford Flower Farm, Overbrook, Pa., with Beacon. Scarlet was the best class in the show and the two first showed up fine. The other entries were splendid stock, but lacked in stem.

Crimson, Cottage Gardens Co., first on Creole Beauty; Jas. D. Cockcroft, second on Harvard.

Any other color, John E. Haines, first on Imperial; F. R. Pierson Co., second on Helen M. Gould.

The following were the awards in Class B, each color calling for vases of fifty blooms each:

White, Chicago Carnation Co., first on White Perfection.

Enchantress shade of pink, Chicago Carnation Co., first on Enchantress; H. Dale Estate, Brampton, second, also on Enchantress. F. R. Pierson Co. also exhibited a fine vase.

The only exhibit in the class for Lawson shade of pink was not labeled.

Scarlet, Guttman & Weber, first on Victory; F. R. Pierson Co., second on Red Lawson. W. Fendley, of Brampton, Ont., exhibited Flamingo.

Crimson, Chicago Carnation Co., first on Harlowarden.

The following were the awards in Class C, each color calling for vases of twenty-five blooms each:

White, Chicago Carnation Co., first on White Perfection; Dale Estate, second on White Lawson. W. Fendley exhibited Lady Bountiful. Chas. S. Strout, Biddeford, Me., sent a fine vase of Lady Bountiful, but was too late for competition.

Lawson shade of pink, Dale Estate, first on Mrs. Lawson; W. J. Lawrence, Eglinton, Ont., second on Mrs. Lawson. W. Fendley exhibited Nelson Fisher.

Crimson, E. Crowhurst, Humber Bay, Ont., first on Harlowarden; Dale Estate, second on Governor Roosevelt. W. J. Lawrence and W. Fendley also exhibited.

Any other color, Dale Estate, first on Nelson Fisher; Dale Estate, second on Golden Beauty.

The awards in Class D, calling for 100 blooms, any variety, any color, were as follows: No gold medal was awarded as stock did not score high enough; silver medal to Cottage Gardens for Alma Ward; bronze medal to Dailledouze Bros., Flatbush, N. Y., on No. 348. Other exhibitors were H. Weber & Sons Co., of Oakland, Md., with Toreador; a good variegated; Cottage Gardens Co., with Elsa Struss, good dark pink; Cottage Gardens Co., with Mrs. Ward; F. R. Pierson Co., with Winsor; Dale Estate, with Excelsior; Dailledouze Bros., with White Perfection; John E. Haines, with Red Riding Hood, Imperial and Pink Imperial; Chicago Carnation Co., with Aristocrat and Welcome. This was the best competition in the show and needed close judging for the silver medal. Alma Ward was the most generally admired vase in the show.

S. A. F. medals for vases of fifty flowers, any American variety, not yet disseminated, were awarded as follows: Silver medal to Cottage Gardens Co., for Alma Ward. Bronze medal to Bassett & Washburn, for No. 20. There was splendid competition in this class, the following varieties being staged in fine shape: Mrs. Ward, by the Cottage Gardens; The Marchioness, by L. E. Marquisee, Syracuse; Elsa Struss, by the Cottage Gardens; No. 23, by Bassett & Washburn; Chrystal, by the Wa-no-ka Greenhouses, Barneveld, N. Y.; Pink Imperial, by J. E. Haines; No. 303, by Dailledouze Bros.

The special prize for largest and best display was won by F. R. Pierson Co., who staged over 5,000 blooms. A special display of Winsor was awarded a certificate.

The cup of the Canadian Horticultural Association for six vases of fifty blooms each was won by F. R. Pierson Co.

The Steele-Briggs cup for six vases of twenty-five was won by W. J. Lawrence.

The King Construction Co. cup for growers using King greenhouses was won by W. J. Lawrence on Lawson.

The Dale Estate cup for 100 blooms any variety to be disseminated in 1907 was won by the Cottage Gardens Co., on Beacon.

The John H. Dunlop special for fifty blooms white was won by the Cottage Gardens Co. on No. 2653.

The Wm. Gammage special for a pink never before exhibited, lighter than Lawson but darker than Enchantress, was won by Dailledouze Bros. on No. 348.

The W. J. Lawrence prize for fifty blooms, open only to growers with less than 20,000 feet of glass, was won by E. Crowhurst, on Enchantress.

The John H. Dunlop prize for private gardeners was won by Malachi Tierney, on Enchantress.

The George Vair special prize for twenty-five red went to Guttman & Weber, for Victory.

Not for Competition.

A certificate was awarded John Reimels, Woodhaven, N. Y., for No. 32, scoring 86 points.

H. Weber & Sons were awarded a certificate on Toreador, scoring eighty-six points.

A. Roper, Tewksbury, Mass., was awarded a certificate on Bay State, securing eighty-five points.

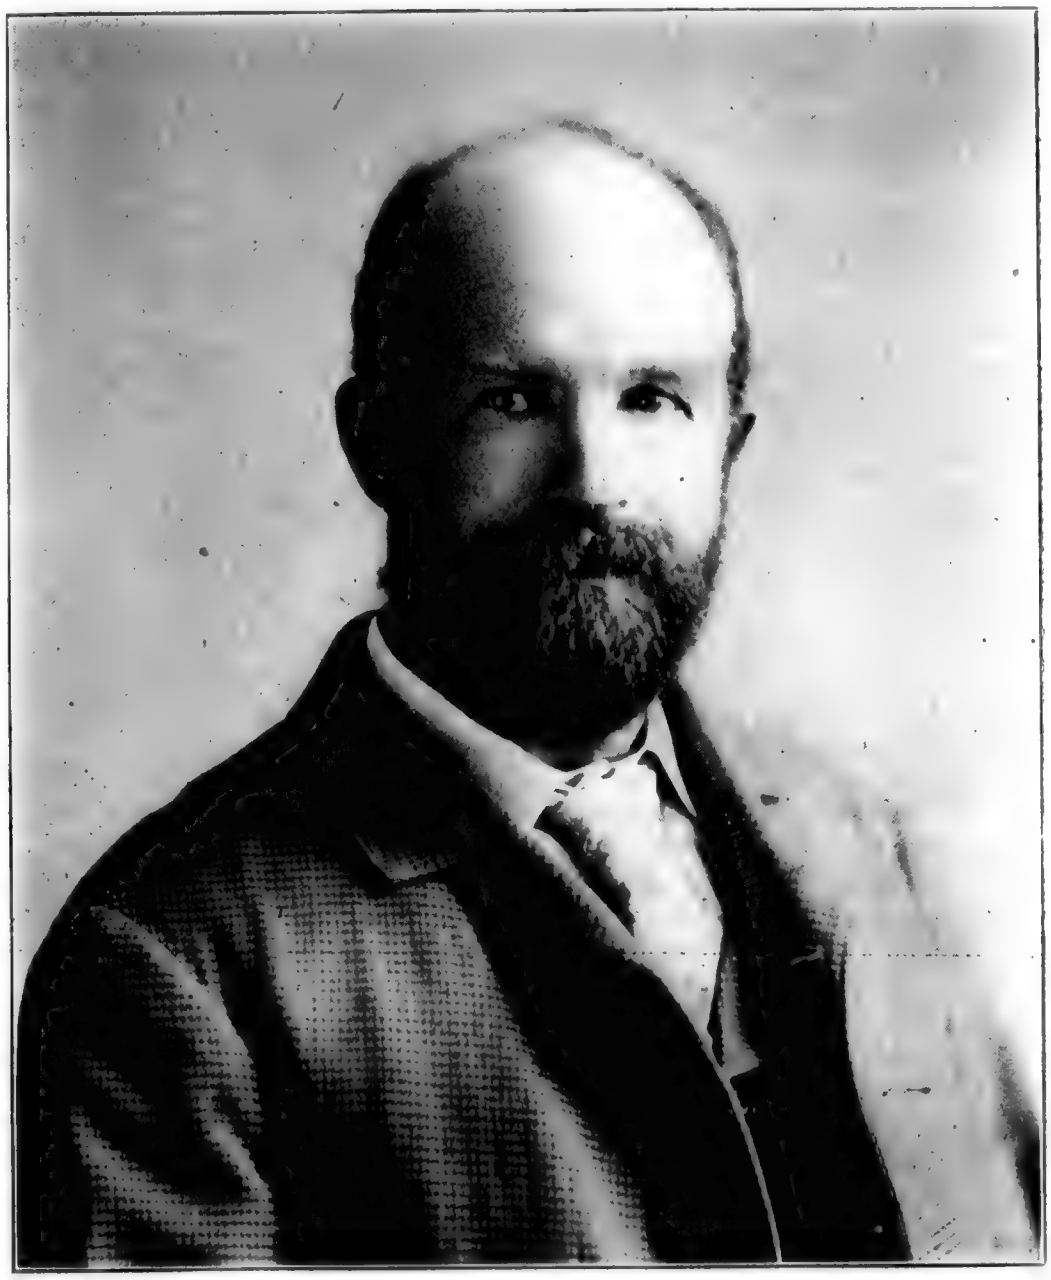
Wm. Nicholson, Framingham, Mass., arrived late with some fine blooms, including Afterglow.

M. Tierney, Highlands, N. J., was unfortunate with Mrs. Robert Hartshorne, a good red, which was damaged in transit.

John Murchie, Sharon, Pa., had a good red but the stem was weak.

Fred Burki, Gibsonia, Pa., had a fine dark pink but it was weak in stem.

J. D. Cockcroft, Northport, L. I., had a fine vase of fifty; a good flower and stem resembling Lawson.



W. J. Palmer & Son, Lancaster, N. Y., exhibited Red Lawson, a variegated sport and a pink sport, all good commercial stock.

H. Weber & Sons Co., Oakland, Md., had three seedlings, which, arriving late, could not be entered for competition. They were Mabelle, Toreador and No. 24-02.

Baur & Smith, Indianapolis, had two promising varieties, May and St. Nicholas, which arrived late.

E. A. Stroud, of the Strafford Flower Farm, Overbrook, Pa., was another of the late arrivals. His varieties were Robert Craig, Mrs. M. A. Patten and Victory, all fine flowers.

R. Witterstaetter, Cincinnati, was on hand with a batch of fine seedlings of Aristocrat.

Thomas Manton.

(Ex-president of the Canadian Horticultural Association and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Toronto Gardeners' and Florists' Association.)

F. Dorner & Sons Co., Lafayette, Ind., had a number of seedlings, notable among which were No. 97-03, yellow; 5-03, crimson; 14-04, red.

P. R. Quinlan, Syracuse, exhibited a number of commercial varieties, all well grown.

Trade Exhibits.

The E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., staged a vase of its new rose, Rhea Reid, which was fine and attracted much attention.

Wm. Fendley, Brampton, exhibited some good Princess of Wales violets.

The Bedford Floral Co. staged an especially fine vase of Richmond roses.

J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati, had a fine exhibit of begonias and Farleyense for which he is so well known. Two new begonias also were shown.

W. P. Craig, of Philadelphia, staged some splendid plants of the new fern, Nephrolepis Amerpohlii.

H. H. Barrows & Son, Whitman, Mass., exhibited some well grown specimen plants of Nephrolepis Whitmani.

Grover Bros., of Buffalo, made an exhibit of their ever-ready pot covers made of waterproof crepe paper.

Thursday's Sessions.

The reading of essays occupied a large part of Thursday's sessions. All save that of R. O. King appear in this issue.

The most important work of the meeting followed the reading of the report of the committee on nomenclature, which was as follows:

Nomenclature Committee Report.

Your committee reports the registration of the following carnations during the past year:

Stevenson Bros., Govanstown, Md., Splendor.

James D. Cockcroft, Northport, N. Y., Harvard, Georgia and Faust.

Baur & Smith, Indianapolis, Ind., Pocahontas.

F. Dorner & Sons Co., Lafayette, Ind., Red Chief, Winona and Bonnie Maid.

J. D. Thompson Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., registered Lucile.

H. Weber & Sons Co., Oakland, Md., Toreador.

Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., Red Riding Hood.

Dailledouze Bros., Flatbush, N. Y., Welcome. The registration of Welcome is provisional and subject to the approval or disapproval of this society, it being a pink sport of Mrs. T. W. Lawson and will be on exhibition at the meeting.

Malachi Tierney, Highlands, N. J., Mrs. Robert Hartshorne.

Registration is getting to be quite a bit of work. One of the above registrations was effected after an interchange of eight letters, several of the others requiring three and four, owing to the fact that the list of names that have been used is cumbersomely large, and, also, to the fact that some introducers of new varieties do not take the trouble or do not care to go to the expense of registration.

From the amount of space given by our trade papers to this matter of registration, there is no excuse for any originator not to know that when he names a carnation, the proper thing to do is to have that name registered with the society at once, the cost being but $1 per name, and it is not necessary even to be a member of the society to have a variety registered.

We, therefore, again recommend that no variety under name be allowed to compete in the exhibitions of this society unless said name has been properly registered, either with this society or the S. A. F., and that this rule be in force for our next exhibition, with the privilege of registration the first morning of the exhibition for those who may have previously neglected it or do not know of this rule.

We would also recommend that all names registered previous to 1896 be eliminated from the working list of this committee.

The report was signed by Albert M. Herr, A. Herrington and Eugene Dailledouze.

There was much discussion on allowing the name, Welcome, to stand for a flesh-colored Lawson. The name was adopted by a vote of the society. The by-law requiring that a committee judge new varieties growing before they receive the society's certificate was revoked.

The committee on colors, W. N. Rudd, Fred Lemon and C. W. Ward, reported the following definitions: Flesh pink, those shades of a flesh and salmon type; light pink, those lighter shades verging on the true pink and lighter than Lawson; dark pink, as dark and darker than Lawson, including all so-called cerise not dark enough to be classed as red; red or carmine, all shades of red that can not be classed as scarlet or cardinal; scarlet or cardinal, all light shades now commonly known in the trade as scarlet; crimson, those shades now classed as crimson; any other color, any color distinct from the above; white, yellow and variegated to stand. The committee recommended maroon instead of crimson, but the society refused to concur.

The society adopted resolutions expressive of sympathy for Wm. Scott in his illness.

The McKinley memorial fund was voted $100.

Election.

When the hour arrived for the selection of the next place of meeting C. W. Ward made a strong plea for Washington and carried the decision over Fred Dorner's earnest opposition in behalf of Indianapolis.

The election of officers then was proceeded with and resulted as follows: President, Fred H. Lemon, Richmond, Ind.; vice-president, Peter Bisset, Washington; secretary, Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa.; treasurer, Fred E. Dorner, Lafayette, Ind.

Entertainment Features.

The ladies were entertained by a drive about the city and at the theater.

The Toronto Gardeners' and Florists' Club will entertain at a banquet at King Edward's hotel this evening, Thursday.

By invitation of the florists of Brampton, the convention party will go to that city Friday morning on a special train for a look at the greenhouses there.

Carnation Sarah A. Hill at B. K. & B. Floral Co., Richmond, Ind.

Mr. Maxfield, of Maxfield & Dimond, Warren, R. I., was on hand with an exhibit of his artificial calyx, which he offers as the ounce of prevention that is better than a pound of cure, for its use prevents split calyxes.

The Baur Floral Co., Erie, Pa., showed a device for mending split carnation calyxes. It is an entirely original idea and was of much interest to the growers.

The King Construction Co., Toronto, erected a model greenhouse, embodying a number of their patent features of construction.

John Birnie.

NOT TOO MANY NEW VARIETIES.

[A paper by John Birnie, West Hoboken, N. J., read before the American Carnation Society, at the Toronto Convention.]

"Are there too many new carnations introduced?" This is the question put to me by the American Carnation Society. I think it will be quite safe to give a negative answer to the question. Beautiful as the American carnation is at the present time the summit of perfection has not yet been reached and generations yet to come will find the goal still in front of them.

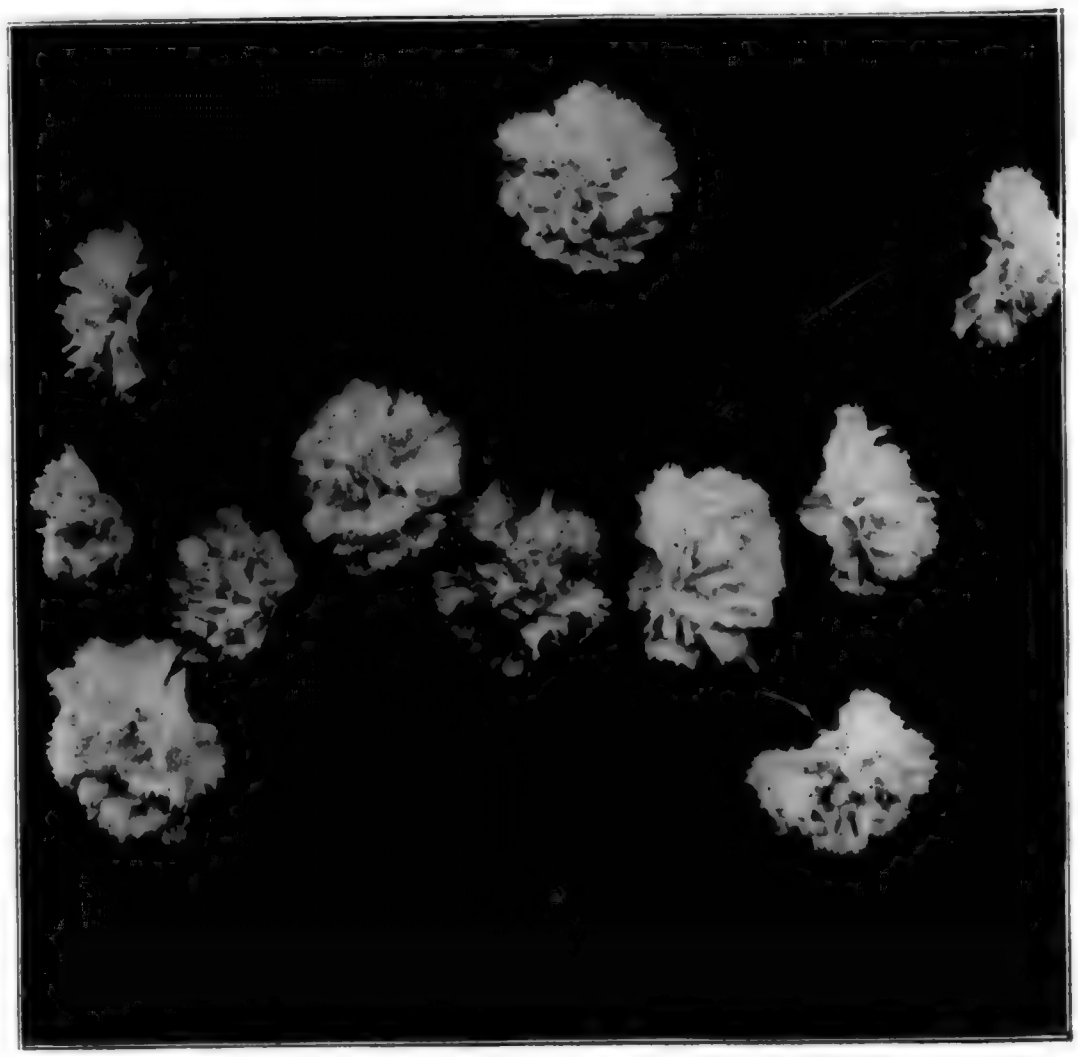
The Early Trials.

There was a time, some fifteen or more years ago, that carnation growers throughout the country looked a little askance at the "new carnation," and not without good reason. We had at that time an avalanche of new carnations, many of which were found to be worthless, causing considerable loss and disappointment to those who bought them, and with those new carnations several new diseases were introduced, which created quite a commotion in carnation growing circles. Strenuous efforts were made to cure or overcome those diseases by the use of quack nostrums, but in many cases the cure was found to be worse than the disease.

It might be said here, however, that those diseases never put experienced growers to any great inconvenience; and introducers gradually becoming aware of the fact that carnations grown under proper treatment and natural conditions were immune, those diseases finally disappeared, and today are never seen in any properly handled establishment.

The Society's Certificate.

Introducing a new carnation at the present time is, however, an altogether different matter to what it was fifteen years ago, or before the advent of the American Carnation Society. This society has surrounded the legitimate introducer with such restrictions as will make it absolutely impossible for him to introduce a new carnation which has not at least good qualities enough to make it desirable in some branch of our business.



Under the resolution passed at Boston, the much coveted certificate of merit will be harder to get than ever, seeing that the carnation must score the required eighty-five points or more on the exhibition table, and also be examined at the introducer's establishment. This, I think, is a step in the right direction, and for the first time makes the certificate mean something to the intending buyer.

Hitherto the certificate of merit has only been a sort of special prize for specially selected flowers cut from plants which have been specially treated so as to produce blooms large enough to attract special attention on the exhibition table. This proves nothing, except that the varieties exhibited can, by intensive cultivation, be induced to produce large flowers. As to how many flowers can be produced per plant we are left to guess; neither have we any idea how those varieties will act under ordinary commercial treatment.

Expense of Examination.

This new departure will, if it is ever put in force, be of great help to the intending purchaser of new carnations; in fact, it appears to be altogether for his benefit and protection. Such being the case, all expenses incurred by the examining committees, however appointed, should be paid by the society, even if this necessitates an increase in the annual dues to do so. The introducers, or promoters, could hardly be expected to pay directly for what is so obviously advantageous to the buyer, and might not always be of equal advantage to themselves.

I am also of opinion that the field ought to be widened by reducing the scale a little, as I believe many carnations that would not score eighty-five points on the exhibition table would, when examined growing on the bench, be found to possess other good points, such as health, productiveness, habit, etc., which would make them desirable for commercial purposes, and probably prove more profitable than the larger varieties. Many of our best paying commercial carnations today would have no show on the exhibition table.

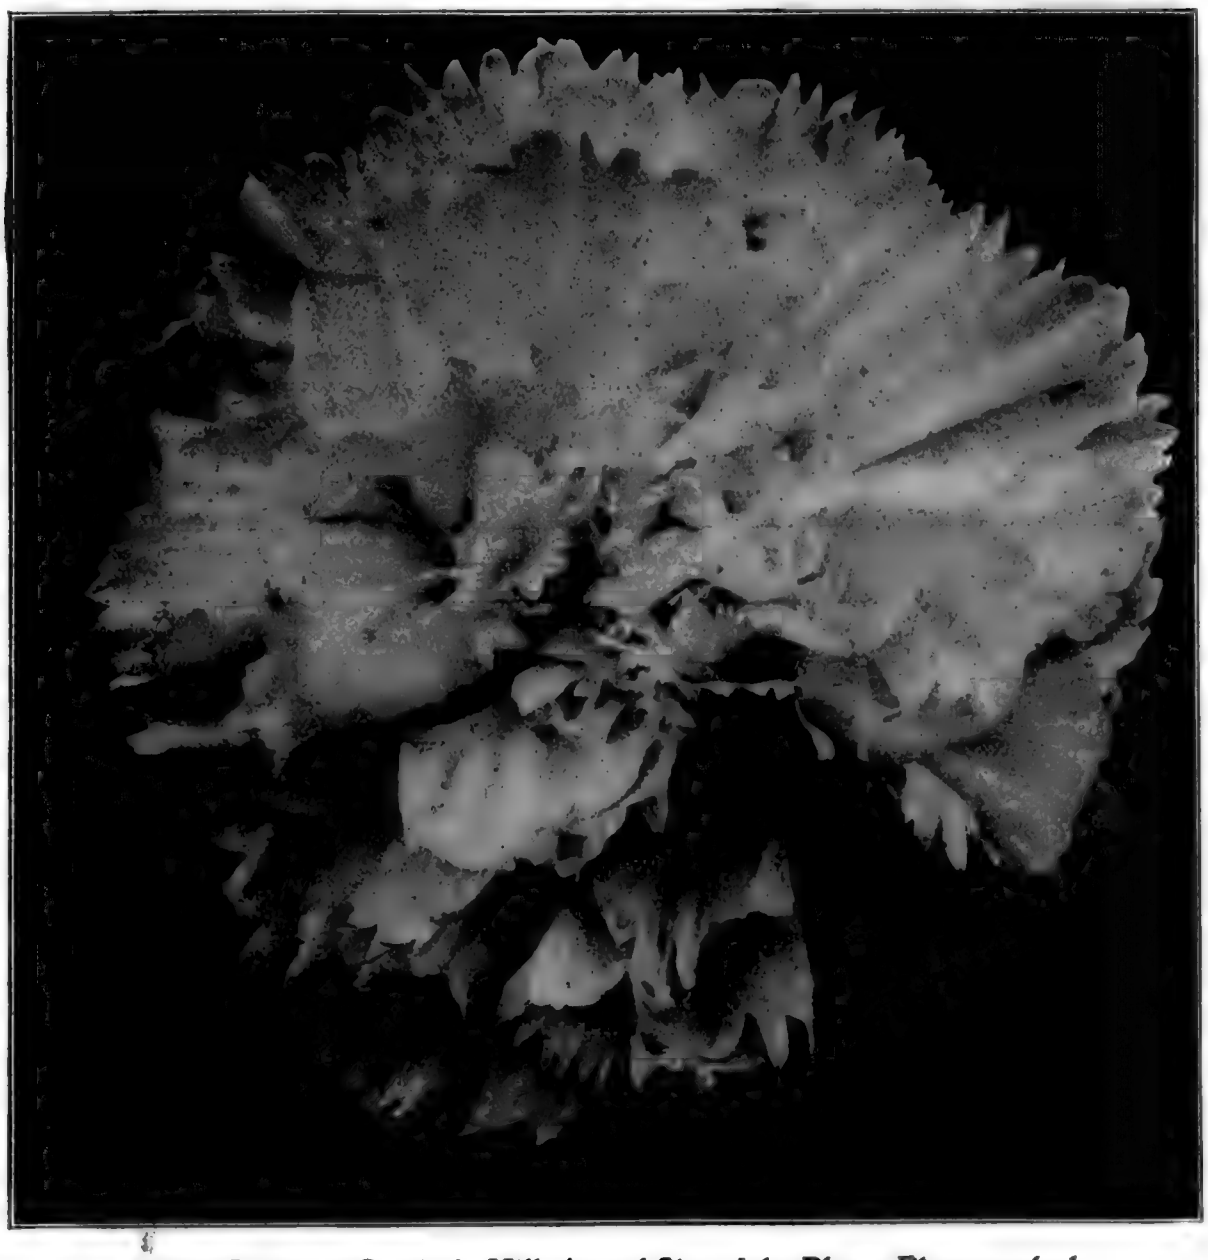
Look Behind the Scenes.

The society might with propriety go a step farther and keep a watchful eye on every new carnation, from the time it is registered until it makes its début after receiving its final certificate, and also inquire into the merits and demerits of all new carnations, whether they are introduced through the medium of the American Carnation Society or otherwise.



Those committees might also, with propriety, take a walk through the introducer's propagating house, just to have a look at those "selected" cuttings, and see if conditions are all right. It is said that cuttings which go in there in good condition often come out with weakened constitution and other ailments which make them of little value to those who buy them.

Only by adopting some such methods will the American Carnation Society give the purchaser of new varieties the protection he is entitled to, and at the same time make it impossible to introduce "too many new carnations."

Size Versus Fragrance.

Our present-day carnation introducers seem to be directing their efforts more to increasing the size of the flower than anything else, and their success in that direction is wonderful, but while they are struggling for size, it looks as if they were losing sight of one of the chief attributes of the carnation; namely, fragrance. The only two varieties in commerce at the present time which retain the much-admired clove scent are Flora Hill and Boston Market. A carnation with the color and size of Enchantress and the fragrance of Boston Market would be an acquisition worthy of the efforts of our introducers. Or is strong fragrance a characteristic of the white carnation as it is of the white verbena? However that may be, an effort in that direction would not be amiss. Taste demands fragrance, just as fashion demands color.

Size, however, is likely to be the main aim of the American introducer for some time to come, and the successful efforts of our British brethren in the profession to improve the carnation will furnish the incentive. We read of Malmaison carnations eight inches across, and also of some crosses between English and American varieties which the Englishmen claim are improvements on the latter. Under those circumstances the American introducer is not likely to rest on his laurels; evidently there are foemen worthy of his steel on the other side of the water.

For Pot Culture.

Hitherto our introducers have devoted their entire attention to the development of the carnation as a cut flower, but there is another phase of carnation advancement which they have altogether neglected, although they have had numerous hints regarding it, both in the trade press and from the platform. I refer to the carnation for pot culture. We need a race of dwarf carnations, of every shade of color. Colors that could not be used in the cut carnation would be very desirable in this class, and fragrance should be one of its prominent features.

A race of carnations of the kind mentioned would mark an epoch in the plant trade. They could be grown in ordinary pots for the general plant trade, or put in pans or vases for decorative or holiday purposes. They could be flowered at any time without undue forcing, and would certainly make a far more satisfactory house plant than the short-lived although pretty azalea. They could also be used for summer planting and would fill a long-felt want in that direction, as I think it is extremely improbable that a carnation which would prove to be entirely hardy in our northern latitudes will ever be produced. There won't be "too many carnations introduced" until this much-needed class receives the attention it deserves.

Encourage the Introducers.

Any effort to discourage carnation introducers in their endeavor to improve the carnation would be a mistake. Those whom we might call our professional hybridizers have hybridizing down almost to a science, and with the magnificent varieties now at their command as subjects to work on, decided improvements may be looked for in the near future, both on this and the other side of the Atlantic. The 4-inch flower may materialize at any time, but that will not satisfy the ambition of our carnation introducers. To them one step in advance only suggests another, and when the 4-inch carnation is an accomplished fact they will, with characteristic perseverance, reach out for one still larger.

CARNATIONS IN CANADA.

[A paper by William Gammage, of London, Ont., read before the American Carnation Society at the Toronto Convention.]

When I accepted your invitation to write a paper on "Carnations from a Canadian Point of View," it seemed as if it would be an easy thing to comply with your request. But when the time came for me to prepare the matter it seemed to embrace a good deal more than one would infer from a casual glance at that innocent looking heading.

Commercial Progress.

If I may subdivide it: First, I presume, "point of view" means, commercial value. Without statistics at hand, I have to rely on observation. My first observation would lead me to surmise that we Canadians have a speculative faith in the future, for, year by year, we see new additions to our ranks, new structures of the most modern architectural design, and invariably a large percentage of these new additions are devoted to carnations. Nor are these increased investments confined to new concerns alone, for all along the line you will find the older establishments building, building; not as they used to a few years ago, one or two small houses at a time, but now it is a whole block of houses, comprising many thousands of feet of glass, and these, too, are largely devoted to producing carnations for bloom alone, for as yet no one seems to have made any special effort at the rooted cutting business.

Nor are these investments confined to the older and more thickly settled portions. But away out in the west, where distance has no meaning, in that country of so much wealth and future prosperity, we find floral establishments, like mushrooms, springing up, not as in the past with us pioneers in the business, who with limited capital, had to do most of our own building, and not much of it at a time. But like everything else in that country with ample capital to back enterprise, modern establishments are springing into existence, and in these, too, the carnation holds a place of prominence.

Effect of the Convention.

The far-reaching stimulus, the effect which this meeting will have on the carnation as a commercial product, will be enjoyed directly by all growers and dealers, both large and small.

To those who have never before attended a meeting of this society the exhibition has been a revelation. It has awakened in them a new ambition; supplied food for thought and action. Educational in its scope, attractive in arrangement, effective in its object, it will have done more to popularize the carnation than any other method we could have employed. So much from this point of view.

Changes in Cultural Methods.

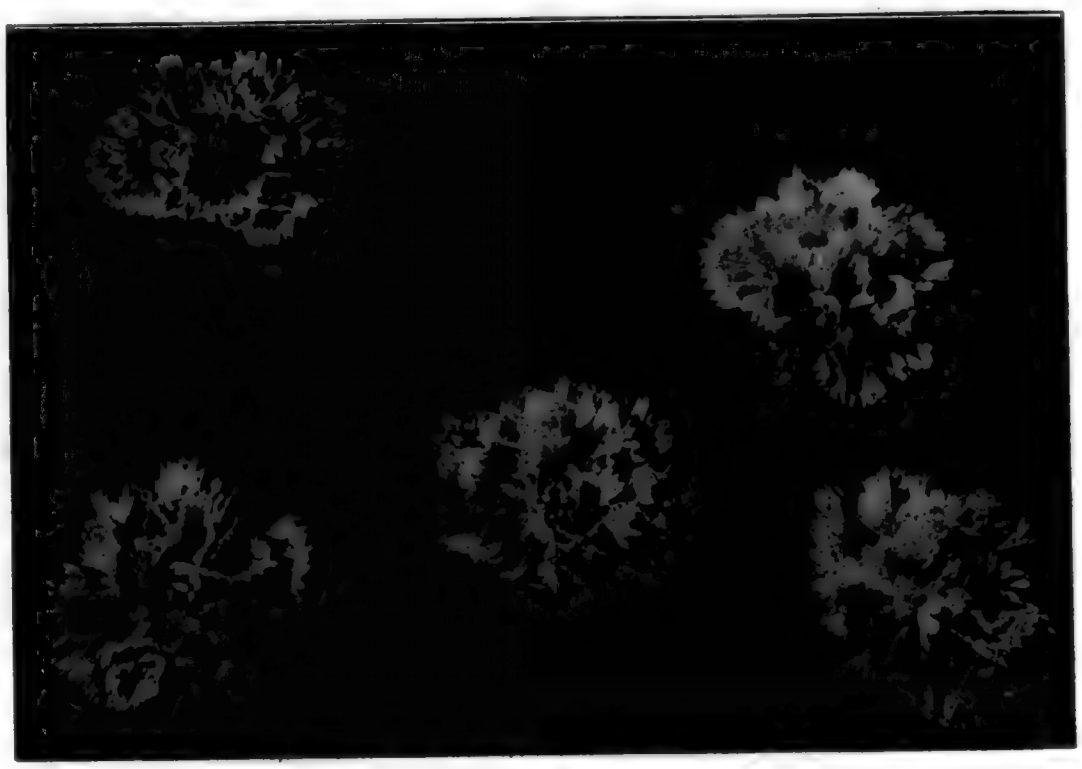
Not only has the style of our buildings, their construction and operation undergone changes to meet the ever-increasing demand, but our cultural methods have also kept pace with the necessities of the day. Local conditions, here as well as elsewhere, have their influence. Sections have a demand for color or quality that is not felt in others. Yet go where you will, be it the cosmopolitan city or the rural hamlet, the carnation is the popular flower with the people at large. True it is, that no special effort has been made to introduce new carnations of Canadian origin. Up to the present our growers have devoted their energies to growing for commercial bloom alone; but that we are not backward, where new varieties are concerned, you will find evidenced when you visit the leading growers. To Canadians belong the honor of first recognizing the merits of some of the leading commercial varieties which have held a place more profitable than many that have been heralded forth with glowing description and brilliant pen pictures of the fabulous returns to be made by investing in them. But, alas, how often have our expectations been realized of "getting rich quick" from these investments?

If we were to go over the list of introductions of from five to ten years ago how many would we find occupying anything like a prominent place with the trade? I venture you can count them on less than the fingers of one hand.

New varieties have come and gone; some introducers have made fame and fortune; others have lost the confidence of the trade by their too sanguine expectations from their pet introductions, or from lack of experience, or want of business morality. Be that as it may, the carnation has gained a prominent pinnacle in commercial floriculture, from which may it never lose its prestige.

From year to year new varieties will come forward. Whether better than those of the present day, time alone will tell. What is new today will be old tomorrow, and the older varieties, like the growers of today, will pass into oblivion, and in their place will rise a generation that we earnestly hope will be no discredit to their forefathers.

AMERICAN SORTS IN EUROPE.



[A paper by C. Engelman, of Saffron Walden, England, read before the American Carnation Society at the Toronto Convention.]

Winter-flowering carnations already were grown for the English markets some thirty years ago. The first were French varieties, and as the demand for choice flowers increased, new kinds were raised, some of which enjoyed great popularity for a number of years and, though in size and length of stems they could not be compared with the present day carnation, in color, fragrance and productiveness, they left little to be desired.

The American Invasion.

The first carnations of American origin were introduced into England about fifteen years ago, and as I am told by one of the first importers, turned out to be rather a disappointment. Of later varieties, Daybreak was already grown in considerable quantity. However, it was not until the 30,000-dollar Lawson made its appearance that the boom began.

Even then there were but few growers who understood the cultivation of the divine flower and I am afraid Mr. Fisher would not have recognized his own child had he seen it in some of the English greenhouses. There were a few, though, that did the trick, and their produce made handsome prices in Covent Garden market. This, of course, was the best means of popularizing the flower, for the English florist is as much after the £ s. d. as his American cousin is after the dollar. There was money in growing carnations, and consequently it was taken up by many new firms. Every new variety that was boomed in America was eagerly imported, grown and very often thrown away the first year, as many were quite unsuitable for the English climate.

H. Weber & Sons Co.'s Carnation Toreador.

(Seedling of and hoped-to-be successor to Prosperity.)

Influence of Enchantress.

Then came the glorious Enchantress and with it the germs of the new disease called the carnation fever, which attacks flower-growers and flower-lovers. The germ has not been discovered yet, but it is there right enough, I have no doubt, and it spreads fast, too, and makes the disease very catching.

I caught it a few years ago, and am not likely to get rid of it again, for it seems incurable. It is a comfort that it is a painless disease, at least as long as the market prices for the carnation blooms are good.

However this may be, there is no doubt that Enchantress has helped to popularize the American carnation more than any other six varieties taken together. If there is a new variety being introduced, the first question generally is: "Is it as good as Enchantress?" But, alas, I am sorry to say those that have come since have not been as good. But perhaps I should not say I am sorry; rather, I am glad they have not been so good, for I think it is really a blessing in disguise that nothing up to the present in other colors has come up to Enchantress, as it shows the hybridizer a goal well worth obtaining, plainly before him, and it is certainly easier to work towards something that we can clearly see before us than to try reaching an ideal that only exists in our imagination.

However, I am afraid I am getting off my track, which you will kindly excuse, for it is one of the symptoms of the carnation fever that if you start one of those who has the complaint going on this kind of subject it will take a mighty effort to stop him.

Quantities Grown in England.

The American carnation stands in England today something like this: There are, I should say, about one million plants grown for the production of cut flowers alone. Ninety per cent of these at least are cultivated in pots. Of the remainder, two-thirds are planted on raised benches and one-third on solid beds. The latter two methods are gaining in favor, and in ten years' time I should not be surprised to see the state of things reversed.

Besides these, there are a large quantity grown in private establishments, and hardly any of the up-to-date estates is now without its special carnation house.

The number of the American kinds grown in this way I should estimate at 100,000 to 200,000. Ninety-five per cent at least are grown in pots. This number is constantly increasing, and there is no doubt that the modern winter-flowering carnation is beginning a fight for supremacy with the chrysanthemum, which has hitherto been the unassailed queen of the autumn and winter. I calculate that in five years' time there will be at least three times the present quantity grown in England.

On the Continent.

The continent of Europe is a little behind England as regards the popularity of the American carnation. However, the fever germ has crossed the Channel and the North Sea and the carnation fever has caught on.

In Germany, a very limited number of growers have cultivated the American kinds for a few years, and managed to keep the names secret for a time. This game does not do for a long time in the twentieth century. There are too many trade papers about, and if there is money in a thing it will come out. This is as it should be; then, after all that is said and done, the policy of the open door is the only progressive one and beats the surrounding of places with a Chinese wall always in the end. Now that the secret is out, the German trade is all the more eager to obtain the wonders from across the Atlantic, and consequently a good trade is being done with young plants.

This is not only the case in Germany, but also in France, Belgium, Russia, Denmark and Austria; in short, all the countries on the continent of Europe are going in for the American carnations, and I don't think I am overestimating it, if I say that within five years there will be fifty times more American carnations grown than there are today.

I know of one German grower, who only about two years ago purchased some $2,500 worth of carnation stock from the south of France, and after giving the American varieties a trial this season, intends to discard all his French varieties and grow the American ones in their place.

Even beyond Europe, the fame of the divine flower has spread, for only a month or so ago I sent a fairly large consignment of young plants to Egypt, which arrived well, and I hope will do well. That they are going ahead in Australia is well known. About Asia I cannot say anything, as I have sent no further than the Crimea that way. Anyhow, in four continents out of five the American carnation is known and grown, and the rapidity with which it has found its way is nothing less than phenomenal. This may partly be due to "booming," but vastly more because of its sterling value.

Two Dangers.

All this is well and good, but two great dangers are looming ahead. One: How long will it go on before the supply is in excess of the demand? The other and greater: How soon shall we be swamped with innumerable quantities of novelties, which according to the raiser will all be better than Enchantress, but which in reality will only be useless rubbish that must disgust the straight and honest florist and damage the trade for those few new varieties that are really good?

Lack of Sun a Factor.

To discuss how the American carnation as seen in England compares with its brother in the States, or how English methods of growing are inferior or otherwise to the American, would lead too far. However, one thing I may be allowed to mention by way of apology. If some of you should ever visit one of our English carnation shows in midwinter and find the blooms inferior or perhaps poor in comparison to your perfect specimen, please remember that the chief factor in producing first-class blooms in winter is the light, and then take into consideration that December 21 the sun rises in London, or rather is supposed to rise, at 8:05 and sets at 3:51. This is according to the almanac. In reality, it does not shine at all through November, December and January; at least, not to any appreciable extent.

Carnation Imperial.

I believe that even your best growers, if they came over here and tried their hand at the game, would be rather disgusted with the result. For this reason alone, I am afraid we shall never be able to produce as good flowers as you do in midwinter, unless you send Mr. Edison along with one of the Chicago packers, who between them might manage to bottle up some of the surplus sunshine during the summer months, that we could let loose in our carnation houses when it is wanted in the winter. Until that happy time arrives, we shall have to be satisfied with what we can get in the ordinary way.

Thanking you for the honor you have given me in asking for and listening to these notes, which, I regret I am not able to read personally, I will conclude with the best wishes for the future success of the American carnation in general, and the American Carnation Society in particular.

Vivat, crescat, floreat!

AMERICAN SORTS IN DENMARK.

[A paper by Peter Riise, Copenhagen, Denmark, read before the American Carnation Society at the Toronto Convention.]

Carnations are not yet grown on a very large scale in Denmark; they are shipped in here from Italy and southern France, from November until May, and it is hard for the home growers to compete with the imported stock.

Experience With American Varieties.

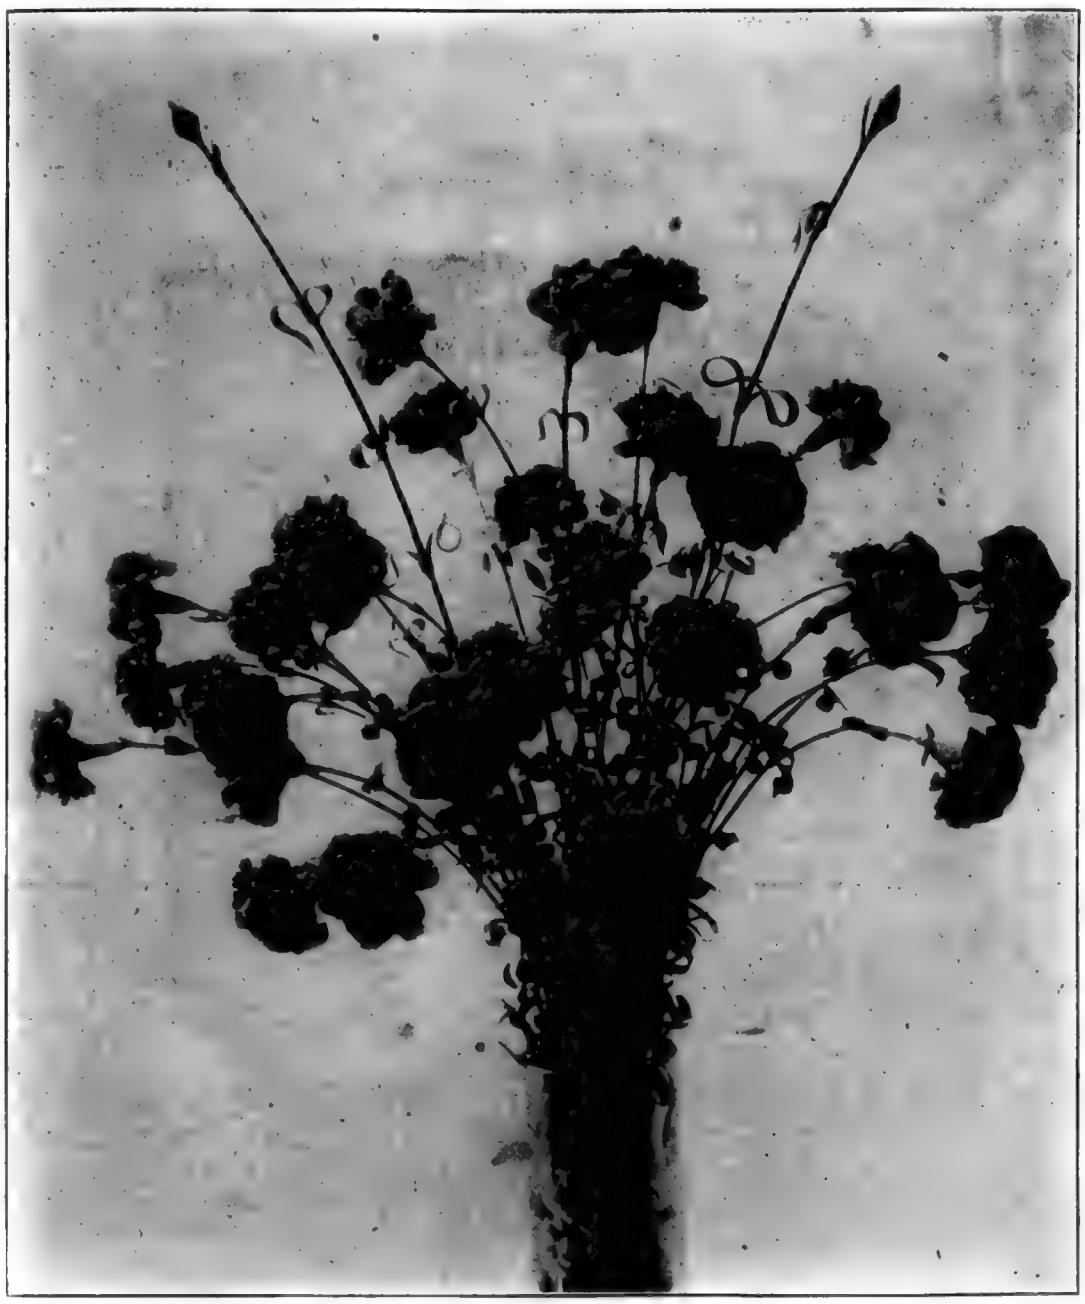
We cannot get as nice carnations here in midwinter as you can in America, as the days are short and we get little sunshine. I have been growing carnations here since 1899, and have been growing nothing but the American sorts. I started with about forty plants and grow now about 7,000 plants. The first winter I had a good deal of trouble with the plants, as a good many would rot, on account of the damp and cloudy weather.

The first varieties I started with were Daybreak, Flora Hill, C. A. Danà, Wm. Scott, Triumph, Evelina and Gold Nugget, but I have now discarded them all, with the exception of Triumph and Daybreak. Flora Hill did not give blooms enough, and, besides, white varieties are not so much called for as the colored sorts. C. A. Dana was too small. Scott came too late with its second crop. It would not come till the last part of May. All of the Evelina rotted in a short time the first autumn. Gold Nugget did not give flowers enough and the most of them came imperfect, and customers will not pay more for yellow than for white or pink. All of Daybreak rotted with the exception of two or three plants and I thought of discarding it, but by careful handling I have since had very good success with it, and it has up till this day been one of my best paying varieties. It is, however, a little inclined to be weak in the stem in the winter time. My best paying variety of them all has been Triumph. It blooms early in autumn and some all through the winter. It seldom splits and it gives a good heavy crop early in the spring, but it sometimes is pretty badly affected with stem-rot.

I have since tried Ethel Crocker, Governor Roosevelt and Mrs. Lawson. Crocker splits badly in the fall and all through winter and does not give a good crop before the middle of summer, too late to pay. Roosevelt gives a good flower, a good stem, but hardly blooms enough in fall and winter to pay, and it also comes too late in the spring with the best crop to be of much account. Lawson splits badly and has rather a short stem in autumn, but in early spring it gives a heavy crop of nice flowers and a good long stem just in the right time to bring a good price.

Testing Newer Varieties.

In the spring of 1905 I bought some of the newer American varieties. I got them from England, but they are quite expensive there. They charge from 1 shilling to 2 shillings apiece. Others have tried to import them from America, but not with good success. In the most cases they were dead when they arrived.



The varieties I am trying are Flamingo, Harlowarden, Harry Fenn, President, America, Enchantress, Prosperity, Floriana, Indianapolis, Nelson Fisher and White Lawson.

I have not formed any decided opinion of them yet, as I only got a dozen of each, and used them only for propagating last winter, but my opinion of each variety is as follows: Enchantress is a fine flower, with good color and stem, but will not give so many flowers as Daybreak, and was a good deal affected with stem-rot in the field. Prosperity I do not think will pay, as variegated colors do not sell so well, and it has not bloomed very much so far.

Estelle looks as thought it would be one of the best. It starts to bloom early and freely, has a good sized flower, stiff stem, not so long, but long enough for our market. It does not split and it is still full of flowers and buds. Flamingo is a fine flower, but too late. Estelle is the better paying of the two.

America is too pale in the winter. In the dark varieties Harry Fenn is to date the best. It has made the best growth in the field and the color seems to take the best. Harlowarden is too dark in winter. President made a poor growth in the field. White Lawson is a nice flower, but being white, does not pay.

Floriana is one of the colors the most called for, but has bloomed very little so far. Indianapolis, from indications, looks as though it would take the place of Triumph. It blooms early in autumn, has a stiffer and more wiry stem, stronger color and is not troubled so much with stem-rot as Triumph. Nelson Fisher, one of the best, has a fine color, is free blooming, has a good stem, does not split, has made a good growth in the field and bench and is not troubled with any kind of disease. It is hard to propagate in winter, but roots quite freely in August.

Carnation Pink Imperial.

BURLINGTON, IA.—The venerable Peter Nies is recovering from his severe illness.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D.—Thomas W. Hobart has submitted rough plans to the city for beautifying the new McKennan park.

SALEM, O.—William Munday has sold his property on McKinley avenue and will move his greenhouses outside the city limits, where he will erect extensive additions to his plant. The soot and smoke in the present location is the cause of the change.

Time of Planting.

We plant in the field about May 1 and lift again the first part of August, but we hardly get as strong growth as you do in the United States. Heretofore I have been propagating my plants in autumn and early winter; but this year I have propagated most of my plants in August, and I now have strong plants, and then I keep them quite cool through the winter, just about freezing. In that way I take the cuttings from the old plants just before throwing them out. They give good cuttings at that time, as we are not troubled much with red spider and the summer is not so hot that they will not make a good growth all through the summer, and in this way we save the plants a good deal in autumn.

In some places here they keep the young plants in a coldframe all winter, only protected with glass and shutters, and the ground will at times be frozen hard, but it is mostly the European varieties they keep in that way. However, I think it a little risky, as I saw in one place where they all died in a short time from drip and rot.

Temperature.

When I first started I kept my carnations on a night temperature of about 50 degrees. The stems would then be rather weak; nevertheless they sold well all through the winter at 60 cents per dozen. But in the last few years the importations from the south have increased to such an extent that they sell carnations here in midwinter from 25 cents to 30 cents per dozen. And these are nice, large flowers, with good, stiff stems, from fifteen to twenty inches long; in fact, they are better flowers than we can produce here with our short days.

I now keep them on about 38 to 40 degrees through December, January and February. In that way we get few flowers in midwinter, but the plants will be better and stronger in the spring and will give a good crop in April, May and June, the time when there is the biggest demand for them. On the whole, we have to look for such varieties as will give a good crop in October and November and again in the spring, and we will get a better price then than in midwinter. In fact, it is impossible for us to compete with the imported stock when it is at its best. They are at present working on a revision of the tariff, and if we should get a duty on cut flowers it would be a great help to the florists and there would be grown a great many more carnations.

A warm house is essential in this latitude. My own houses consist of about 20,000 feet of glass, one-half in carnations. The houses are 18x100 and 24x100, heated by hot water. The glass, 14x19, is of double thickness.

AMERICAN SORTS IN ENGLAND.

[A paper by A. F. Dutton, Iver, Bucks, England, read before the American Carnation Society at the Toronto Convention.]

I am pleased to give you my candid opinion as to the views of my fellow growers and the general opinion of the English public now, in regard to the carnations that have been imported from the States.

Effect of First Showing.

It is now some five years ago that they were first grown and shown to perfection and called American tree carnations, and I have the pleasure of being the first to show them in the way they are now generally shown here. My first exhibit of note was at the Temple, 1903, when they caused quite a sensation, and I may say the great start to their present popularity. They at first met with a great deal of criticism from the border carnation fancier, and I was told by one who is considered the finest raiser of this kind in our country (I may use his words): "Well, Mr. Dutton, I congratulate you on your exhibit; nothing could be more beautiful." With this remark I was quite content, and knew their day would have to come.

Now they are being grown on quite a large scale as a market flower, where before only the inferior and short-stemmed varieties were seen, such as Duchess of Fife, Urial Pike and Miss Joliffe. But, I may add, there is a great difference in the quality of carnations produced by different growers, and it is only the few who can grow to real perfection.

New Society and New Varieties.

This month a newly formed society, namely, the Winter Flowering Carnation Society, held a very successful show at the Botanic Gardens, London, in which the American varieties predominated, there being classes for thirty-six and eighteen blooms of a color, also for groups of cut blooms. The show was in every way a success, and a fine lot of blooms was staged.

I may give a few lines on the new varieties that are being raised from your imported varieties. I consider that before many seasons we shall have some very fine varieties, quite a credit to their parentage. Britannia, which is being disseminated this year, is the finest scarlet I know. It puts Robert Craig and Victory in the shade, and I firmly believe that we shall have other varieties in time, of equal merit. But it is not for me to dwell on the possibilities of the future, but the facts of the past and present.

Shipping.

In regard to shipping, this will always be a great drawback to business being transacted on a large scale, as it is far too uncertain to please the majority of growers here who receive them. I myself have received successful shipments, but these have been few and far between; for instance, one consignment turned out good; another, from the same grower, turned out the reverse, and the loss was eighty per cent. It would have been policy to have burned the entire lot on arrival, as the survivors were weak, unhealthy and infected with rust, also the spot. I often feel I should like to think I had never to ship any more, as it is always a nightmare when shipping time comes in the spring.

Bright Pink Seedling Carnation Exhibited at Toronto by W. G. Saltford, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

(Blooms measure four inches. The variety is as yet nameless.)

Some Poor Varieties.

There is one more point, the last but not least: Many varieties that are so well spoken of and advertised in your papers as gaining different awards of merit prove very poor varieties with us. The following are a few: Fiancee, Cardinal, Ethel Ward, Candace, Indianapolis, Nelson Fisher, Abundance and Flamingo. If this continues, your European buyers will certainly decrease, as it is hardly sufficient, with the losses we sustain through shipping, to make the game worth the candle when procuring really first-rate standard varieties.

MECHANICAL WATERING.

[A paper by Louis Wittbold, Chicago, read before the American Carnation Society at the Toronto Convention.]

I have been asked by your secretary to give my views on mechanical watering, and I wish to ask, do any of us believe that the present mode of watering cannot be improved upon? If we look back at the different things that have been accomplished all along the line in greenhouse construction and heating, etc., even in watering, inasmuch as the hose has superseded the can, we certainly must admit that there is always room for still further improvement. It is only a short time ago when all watering in greenhouses was done with the watering can, and we all know with what prejudice the hose was looked upon as a factor in greenhouse work. This prejudice has gradually been overcome until today even our cousins across the water are using rubber tubes to save time and labor.

Modern Improvements.

The improvements in construction, pumping machinery, specializing of stock grown, etc., have made possible a saving of a large part of the labor of watering. Formerly a mixture of different kinds of plants were grown in one greenhouse in one grand conglomeration, and, of course, each different species of plant needed different care and special attention, and the watering pot or hose could hardly be dispensed with. But at the present time, when there are houses and ranges of houses of one kind of plant; when conditions are equal or as nearly equal as it is possible to get them, this has been changed, and a watering machine can be applied and the labor of watering, which formerly took hours, can now be done in so many minutes, with less waste of water than with the hose and with more equality in its distribution.

Proof Required.

The question will, of course, be asked, what have I to prove the above assertions? And I must admit it is a natural question, as talk is cheap, and facts are what we want in this year 1907. Gold bricks are good things for the con man and we can hardly be blamed for being skeptical about things which are not entirely clear to us and with which we are unfamiliar. But is it fair to allow prejudice to put a brake on improvement? When every minute of time saved is money in our pocket, and when a labor, which now must be attended to by the most experienced, can be mechanically arranged so that, after it has been studied out to the satisfaction of the proprietor, he can give his instructions, so that water is given in just the amounts he has by experience found best for the good of the plants.

Practical Experiments.

I have been asked to give my experience up to date, and will say that I, at first, started using a watering system, for syringing palms, by running a pipe along underneath the plants in the center of the bench, using my patent nozzles which produce a sheet of water in fan shape so that, when these nozzles are spaced along the pipe they will produce a sheet of water the full length of the pipe.

A pipe is connected with a swivel wheel so it can be turned so that, if soil only should be watered, the nozzles can be turned downward, wetting only the soil, and by turning the nozzles upward the foliage can be sprayed. In this way I was able to water or syringe my palms when required with a saving of, at least, ninety per cent of time and labor. I then used the system for watering Boston ferns, suspended overhead in the greenhouse, hanging a plant directly under each nozzle so that, by turning on the water just a little, the water will come from the nozzle in a solid stream and flow into the pot, just as much as is wanted, causing only the drip from the water that runs through the soil, while with a hose, at least ninety per cent of the water would drop on to the plants below. Then, by turning on full pressure, the plants can also be sprayed or syringed. In this way I have been enabled to grow double the amount of stock in my palm houses and with less labor than previously used. I now have a large portion of our two ranges of palm and fern houses equipped, both at our Lake View place and at Edgebrook, and am working on more lines right along, as I find the time saved will pay for the outlay in a short time.

As Applied to Vegetables.

The next experiment I made was in Davis Bros.' cucumber houses at Aurora, Ill., and I quote you the following from a letter: "It saves ninety per cent of our watering labor. We now have the Wittbold system in all houses. Do the watering in an hour which formerly took twelve hours and do better work. We are recommending the system to our friends." I wish to say that Mr. Davis is using it now for the second winter and is much pleased.

The next experiment was in lettuce at Chamberlain & Bunker's, Fremont, Mich., who are large vegetable growers, and the letters I have received from these gentlemen have given me much encouragement. I only mention these two places as a few facts; more would only tire you and would only be a repetition of what these gentlemen have said. You gentlemen are representative carnation growers, and I wish to ask, if a watering system can be applied in palm and fern houses, in cucumber and lettuce houses, can it not also be applied in carnation houses?

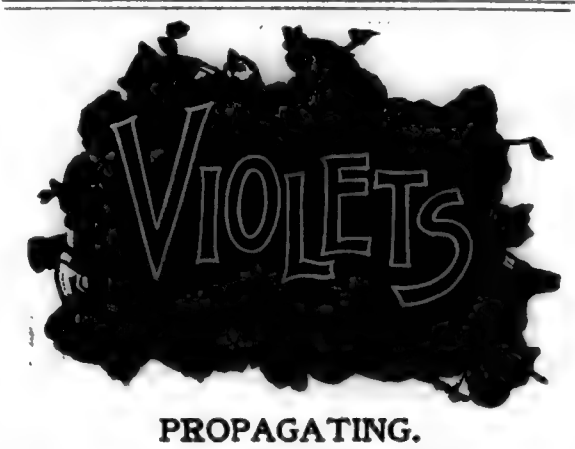
The pipes and nozzles can be so placed that you can water from underneath the plants; that you only water the soil, or spray upward from underneath the plants, or downward from above, just as the case may require.

Value to Carnations.

I am not a carnation grower. But from what experience I have had in other lines, I say it can be done, and it only needs some one to take up the idea with determination to overcome what obstacles are in the way. I firmly believe that mechanical watering is practical and will save thousands upon thousands of dollars every year in labor to the greenhouse men when it is understood, and will do better work than can be done in any other way. Let me suggest that steps be taken by the American Carnation Society to determine the value of mechanical watering by experimenting or otherwise during the coming year, so that more definite reports can be had at the next meeting.

McKINLEY DAY.

I would respectfully call the attention of the carnation growers and florists to the recurrence of McKinley day, January 29, and would emphasize and endorse the comments appearing in recent issues of the trade papers.



The trade is responsible for the success or failure of this day, dedicated to the expression of respect for our martyred president. Far better lose your entire day's stock, or absolutely donate it to the public, than to antagonize this awakening sentiment of the American public by exorbitant and prohibitive prices for President McKinley's favorite and beloved flower on this coming anniversary of his birth.

It is to your interest that the public should know of this day. There is not a newspaper in this country that will not give space referring to and commenting upon it.

A discriminating distribution of a few carnations, either white, red or pink, will emphasize the significance of the day, and the wearers will excel themselves in arousing the dormant sentiment of their friends and acquaintances.

And, lastly, and most important, contribute $1 or more, if you can, to the Florists' Memorial Fund for the McKinley monument, and receive by return mail a handsome steel engraved certificate. Then place this in a prominent place on January 29, thereby offsetting, to a degree, any impression of selfishness on your part, in a public movement that benefits your business.

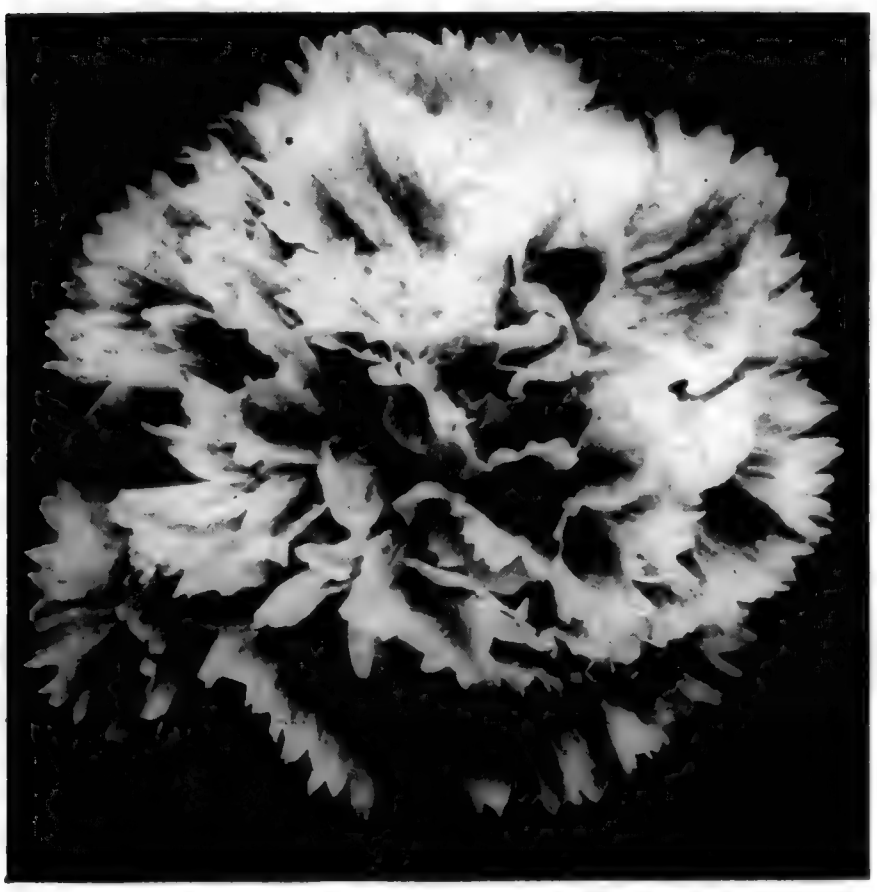
PROPAGATING.

As I said in my last, it is time to begin taking our stock for next year, and this is a matter that needs particular care; I think even more with violets than with some other kinds of stock, for some kinds of plants are more hardy and disease-resistant. But the person who thinks that he can take his cuttings from the stock as it runs in the houses, be he ever so good a grower, will sooner or later—and it is generally sooner—find that his stock is deteriorating.

In looking for the plants that you are to propagate from, reject all such as are at all stunted, or in any way run down in health, or those that did not produce first-class bloom as regards size, color, freedom, odor, etc. Choose only such as are in first-class order. They will now, as the days brighten, begin to feel the influences of spring and will be throwing off many nice, thrifty shoots that will make just the kind of stock you will wish. Many of those will already be throwing out little white roots from the shade and moisture afforded by the parent clump.

When removing these cuttings it is well to take off only a few at a time and throw them, as taken, into a pail of clean, cool water, so that they have no chance to wilt. Then, when you have enough for two or three flats, trim, and prick out at once.



Of course your soil should have been prepared some weeks ago and should be composed of well-rotted sod with about one-fifth of good, rotted manure, preferably from the cow stable, if you have it, and screened, so as to have no straw, leaves, or stones in it. One of the great points in having your soil ready, is having the moisture right; not too dry, or too wet, as there is nothing spoils soil so quickly as handling it when too wet.

Always have your flats of uniform size, for more reasons than one; the first being that it economizes room in shelfing; then, another, in taking tally of stock, you will have the same number of plants in each.

We have found the size recommended several years ago by Professor Galloway to be very handy and economical as regards material. This lets you cut your lath, which you use for sides and bottom, once in two. You will want inch pine stuff for the ends and this should be three inches wide and about thirteen or fourteen inches long, or whatever will best fit the places you have for the flats when filled. The two outside laths should be first nailed on and then you can spread and space the rest between them, leaving a crack between each of, say, about a quarter of an inch. This is for drainage and air and is best covered with damp sphagnum moss when you get ready to fill with soil to keep it from going through the cracks.

Fill the flats full of soil and firm it well before pricking out the cuttings. They will need careful watering and shading, like all cuttings, for several days. Then the shading can be gradually removed as they get established.

This method of putting them directly into the soil, in the flats, saves time; but you cannot always spare the room for the flats so early in the season. In that case the cuttings will have to be put into the propagating bed until rooted. But if you have to do so, be sure and have the propagating bed thoroughly cleaned out and filled with fresh new sand; and it is best to never use it but once at that.

BREEDING GLADIOLI.

[A synopsis of a paper by H. H. Groff, Simcoe, Ont., read before the American Breeders' Association, January 18, 1907.]

As an interested amateur breeder of animated life since boyhood, as well as an enthusiastic horticulturist, the modern knowledge of the similarity of the biology of plants and animals found me with an open and receptive mind, and as appealing more strongly to the imagination than work on animate life, I abandoned the latter, and, to the exclusion of almost every other interest, confined my activity to one plant, the gladiolus, with such effect that in over fifteen years I never lost one day during the breeding season. This persistent and continuous activity, with the use of the best material obtainable from all outside sources, is the price of the success that I am able to claim in the interest of civilization and horticultural science. For an unknown man, in an obscure town, in a country of slandered climate, to bring a semi-tropical plant to Canada, as the foundation for a strain of world-wide recognition, seemed the height of folly and a deliberate courting of failure and loss, and it did not take me long to discover that to secure more than partial success meant a severe and persistent fight.

Conditions of Work.

I found the conditions of soil and climate admirable, and the absence of long continued periods of atmospheric humidity most congenial to the work of successful crossing. Although the season for maturing late crosses is unfavorable, I overcame this difficulty in securing the admixture of midseason and late flowering types by cutting the immature seed spikes on the first threatened frost, and maturing in water a month later—a process requiring much time and trouble—but as pollen from young early flowering types (which bloom till frost) was used, I soon had the valued characteristics of the later flowering sections, available for normal use at a more favorable season, a victory over adverse conditions, of incalculable value.

Again, I found that our clear, dry atmosphere, so favorable to success in crossing, also frequently wilted the flowers; an effect not only making rapid work impossible, but most prejudicial to the "taking" of crosses so made.

This difficulty I overcame by daily carrying the pollen over until the following dawn, when I found that the work could not only be accomplished in far less time, but that the percentage of successful crosses was most materially increased. The two foregoing original practices are the result of a struggle for control, and as I have never heard of them being advised, I may include them in this record of results.

Points for Plant Breeders.

The time allotted for this address will not permit me to report more than a few of the points that I am sure will be valued by plant breeders.

When I began this work, over fifteen years ago, although Europe had been engaged on it for 100 years, the ground was only broken. Varieties lacked vitality, reproductive powers and adaptability to changed conditions, and my first work covered a complete series of violent outcrosses in which every section was made use of to bring the desirable features possessed by each under control for transmission in cross-breeding. From the foundation work of those first years, by the aid of selected types as sires, according to the practice of animal breeders, has this control been handed down with continuous yearly progression to the past season.

In America the flower was discredited, and the demand so influenced by its lack of quality, value and beauty that growers thought of allowing large blocks to freeze in the fields with the view of stiffening the market—certainly not a very progressive idea. The advent of my new hybrids changed all this, and the exhibits made at the Pan-American Exposition, where they were awarded a gold medal, and at the St. Louis World's Fair, where they secured the grand prize, not only repopularized the flower, but exercised a favorable reflex influence on existing low grade stocks. Thus no existing acreage has been displaced, but the values have been improved, with over 100 acres of the highest quality in the world added to this country, of such excellence as to enforce commercial recognition throughout the civilized world. Surely this may be included in the record of results.

My practice has proven that not only can the scientific worker do all that he may sanely plan to do, but he will find that from year to year mutations will appear beyond the range of the area of his expectations, of such progressive value that he will be led onward by an ever lengthening and broadening horizon—beyond the conception of the human mind.

The past season has afforded an increased number of proofs as to the correctness of the system of breeding advocated by me. I repeatedly collected in the field new varieties of special merit, supposing them to be the same, until compared in detail, when the transmitted parental characteristics of each collection were distinctly traceable, but with sufficient variation as to make each variety valuable, each bearing distinctive qualities of value under the diverse cultural conditions to which they inevitably must be subjected.

It is not easy for me to illustrate to you by comparative description the highest points of results claimed by me. If you were all gladiolus experts it would be much easier to secure your appreciation. One effective illustration will assist, however.

Colors Most in Demand.

During the earlier years of my experience in securing commercial efficiency the invariable cry was, "send no red shades." In 1905 Mr. Cowee was offered $5 for a single corm, and I was offered $10 for one of the same variety—a brilliant red—both offers being from amateurs of moderate means, and I may say that no such offer was ever made to me for a variety of any other color. A single spike of six flowers measures one foot wide by two in length, and is so effective as to center attraction in a field of thousands of other varieties. This variety is being rapidly multiplied for early introduction, but you will be interested in learning that I have types of later origin that will supersede it in due time. You will, of course, expect this additional result.

The commercial demand for high class lights has now been filled by the thousands of new varieties originated by me during the first ten years of my work. Selections bred from this material have given me thousands of newer and more advanced types, which have been crossed and multiplied during the past five years for future introduction, and will constitute as marked and distinct an advance as did those shown at the expositions referred to. The value of some of these is beyond estimate.

The present commercial yellow is deficient in color, quality and multiplying qualities. This need will shortly be filled by thousands of new varieties developed by me under the same practice that produced the new light section, all varieties of equal and greater quality than the few novelties issuing from European sources under name.

All other desirable colors are receiving the same attention and improvement by the same system of selected breeding. Among all of these are remarkable types of promise beyond my expectations, individual varieties of such special qualities as to be beyond description for want of adequate comparison—sufficient to ensure your comprehension and appreciation of these results.

Greenhouse Bench Equipped with the Heim Carnation Support.

I have referred to our geographical advantages, but these are by no means sufficient for my personal realization of the best commercial results. Although my season is nearly a month longer than even the northern part of our peninsula, it is fully a month too short for the full maturing of the cormels of many valuable and useful varieties developed from late maturing material.

Origin of America.

The variety named America, erroneously classified as Childsi by the purchaser and introduced under that name, has been grown and sold by me in collections for the past ten years. Its annual cormel production is from 2,000 to 5,000 per cent, but with me a comparatively small percentage mature annually. In this state (Ohio), however, the conditions are more favorable and its multiplication much more rapid in consequence. Of course such experiences are to be expected in work on a semi-tropical plant, and afford proof of my public contention on this point, many years ago, before this experience proved the correctness of my then expressed theory. While I have knowledge of many similar experiences, the naming of this one of my hybrids America has made that variety useful as an illustration of a scientific fact.

Scientific Record.

As I have referred to the fact of scientific results, I beg to record:

That crossing from varieties tending to double has induced the production of twin corms from single seeds.

That bud variation, partial the first season and complete the second, has produced a fixed new type, sporting from one of apparent equal fixity.

That atavism of esthetic and commercial value results from the intercrossing of advanced types of diverse parental extraction, the flower form of the iris, a plant of the same natural order, having been brought from the ages long past and replacing the normal form of that of the original species.

That racial qualities are as potent and capable of direction in breeding for specific results in plant as in animal life.

That no simple or limited crossing can produce the value, quality and satisfaction equal to those resulting from unlimited removals from the wild species on the lines of scientific selection, guided by learned human intelligence.

That the attainment of the highest success in results is easily secured by cultivation of the perception, some learning, an open mind, use of the best material, and unlimited work.

Springfield, Ill.—W. C. Garrard, secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, announces that the state fair for 1907 will be held at Springfield September 27 to October 5. It is to be "the greatest fair on earth."

Cleveland, O.—Plans are under way for a large gladiolus exhibition to be held at Euclid Beach during August, when 50,000 gladiolus spikes are expected to be shown. Prizes will be offered to local growers. Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y., has promised a large display.

PROPAGATION BY GRAFTING.

After the stock has been placed in the grafting case the real work pertaining to success begins. This consists of watchfulness and careful observation, which must be insistent.

The sand or ashes on which the pots rest must be thoroughly moist and the soil in the pots medium wet. The plants should then receive a sprinkling with a nozzle which makes a very fine spray and the case should be closed immediately afterwards.

In ordinary cases the plants require no more moisture for the first five or six days; neither do they require any ventilation. To get rid of any superfluous moisture it is a good plan to remove the sashes for a few moments night and morning. This also freshens the air and if carefully performed will result in no injury to the plants. If the sashes are forgotten and left open too long, ruin will be the result. I need scarcely add that during this period the plants must be carefully shaded and the state of the stock examined, at least twice a day, to see if there is a sufficiency or excess of moisture in the case.

If there are signs of wilting of the foliage it is usually due to too dry an atmosphere, while if the moisture is excessive the leaves have a droopy and saturated appearance and lose color. If the moisture is excessive a thin wedge of wood inserted below the sash will keep it even; but this requires constant watching, especially during dry and breezy weather, and may require altering several times a day in order to keep conditions right. The temperature during this stage and until the union has formed should be about 70 degrees, which may even rise to 75 degrees during bright weather.

As soon as the callus is formed the case will require a little ventilation; but this must be administered very carefully, keeping a strict watch on results and gradually increasing the supply as circumstances demand. By carefully studying conditions and gradually increasing the amount of air given, the sashes can be entirely removed in about twenty-five days when the plants can be removed to the bench. Even after they are on the bench they will require extra care in watering, ventilation and especially in shading for a week or two in order to make a real success.

After treatment is little different from that accorded own root stock, with the exception that as the bark begins to swell the tying material should be examined to see that it does not cut into the bark; and if any suckers make their appearance they should be removed at once. RIBES.

TROUBLE WITH ROSES.

We are sending you two rose plants, out of a house that was in excellent condition until six weeks ago. We have treated them the same as in previous years, and have always had good success. Can you tell us what the trouble is? This trouble seems to be scattered all through the house. Probably one-fifth of the plants are affected. Could it be clubroot? A. H.

After a careful and very critical examination of these plants I can find no trace of any disease and certainly no sign of clubroot or eel-worm. The trouble seems to arise from erratic temperature, ventilating and watering, which would account for the low vitality they possess.

Keep a strict watch on the night temperature, which should be 56 degrees to 58 degrees, allowing a range of 15 degrees to 20 degrees rise during daytime, according to condition of weather. Be careful not to allow the benches to become dry at the bottom and also exercise caution not to overwater. With a little care and patience and with increased sunshine they will outgrow this in a short time.

It would be best not to try feeding for some time till they show signs of returning health. RIBES.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

The attendance at the January meeting of the Springfield Florists' Club was good, considering the extremely unseasonable wet weather which has prevailed for several weeks.

On the department store question, which had been discussed and referred to a committee at a previous meeting, Charles Unglaub reported progress, with a prospect of arriving at a reasonably satisfactory solution.

The subject for the meeting being "Credit," the paper of S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia, on "Our Credit System, its Uses and Abuses," was read by George H. Mellen, from The REVIEW of January 3, 1907. The general discussion of the subject which followed indicated a sentiment favorable to a plan somewhat along the lines suggested by Mr. Skidelsky. The credit committee, which had been previously appointed, reported, through George D. Leedle and George H. Mellen. It favored a more thorough use of the leading mercantile agencies, as well as special trade agencies, and was instructed to formulate a plan for listing all delinquent debtors on the books of members doing a wholesale shipping business.

The mail order firms have been putting out catalogues rapidly and profusely and the southern trade is opening earlier than usual in quite heavy volume. A pleasing custom of the members is the prompt exchange of new catalogues and price-lists as soon as out of press, and the purchase and exchange of stock between local florists is something constant and quite extensive. GE DALE.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The unexpected has happened; we have actually had a snow storm and a touch of winter, clearing the air of grip microbes and giving humanity another grip on the life line. But in twenty-four hours the rain descended and the floods came and slush and mud were again triumphant. Sunday the sun made an effort to get acquainted with New York. The skies cleared at night and the temperature gave signs of hugging zero. Monday we had the fringe of a blizzard.

A remarkable condition of things prevailed in the wholesale market Saturday evening. Because of the long spell of sunless weather the supply of roses suddenly diminished and none of good quality were to be had "for love or money." Beauties rose to $12 per dozen and Maids and Brides to $20 per hundred; even higher figures were quoted in some centers. Advance orders were unsafe to book in the evening and I saw one retailer panicky with five dozen Beauties and an equal number of the best Maids and Brides on his list for early Sunday delivery and not a flower to be found in the wholsale markets to fill the bill. The market was simply cleaned out, and there was nothing left in roses of top grade at any price. Such a condition seldom has been experienced. "How are prices?" "Good, but what's the use? There's nothing coming in and quoting advance rates only makes dissatisfaction."

Now that the weather has cleared and the sun is shining, normal shipments will soon again prevail. In the meantime the interdependence of grower, wholesaler and retailer has been pretty thoroughly and clearly demonstrated. "Useless each without the other."

Carnations will now have their inning. This is carnation convention week and next week we have carnation day in honor of McKinley. Already the wholesale section has emphasized the fact by handsome placards announcing the occasion. It will be observed more every year and a large extra demand is anticipated.

The violet for many days last week was sadly neglected. The weather permitted the street merchants to handle them and prices fell to almost summer rates. But as the week closed the supply decreased and values mounted to 75 cents and $1 again, the latter figure for the fine bunches of 100.

There has been some further retrograding in the price of orchids and gardenias, as well as valley and lilies of all kinds. There are narcissi, hyacinths and tulips to spare. As to quality, the long spell of dark, damp weather tells the story. Few flowers of any kind have done themselves justice. Roses especially have been most unsatisfactory in color. But the law of averages is never annulled. There will soon be abundant compensation in better flowers, larger quantities and sunny days, and so the evening-up process may be confidently expected.

Various Notes.

Many in the business have been seriously ill with the prevailing malady, the grip. Few of the wholesalers have escaped. Even youth and cheerfulness cannot prevent it. We hope now we have seen the last of it for the season. Among its prominent victims was the secretary of the New York Horticultural Society, also Jos. S. Fenrich.

A visit to the plant growers is of especial interest now because it betokens the prospective Easter demand and the voice of the public as to the popular taste at that time. To particularize the growers and describe their progress would absorb too much space, for their name is legion. If the Easter of 1907 may be foretold by the quantity and beauty of the stock now in process of preparation within a radius of twenty miles of New York, it will be far in advance of any of its predecessors. Evidently a great shipping trade is depended on and a word to the out-of-town buyers may not be out of place. Send your orders or make your selections now. The late birds will not catch many good fat worms. Already many thousands of dollars' worth have been labeled and put aside. This is just a friendly warning. Procrastination is a thief. Get busy. Easter is only ten weeks away.

When the auction season opens again shortly, visitors will see a redecorated store at Elliott's that does the artistic management great credit.

Next Wednesday, January 30, at 4 p. m., the Nassau County Horticultural Society dinner at the Oriental hotel, Glen Cove, L. I., will be enjoyed, and if it equals that of last year no one can afford to miss it.

Arthur Boddington rejoices in the addition of an extra to his home department. The little lady and the stork came to Yonkers with the holidays.

F. W. O. Schmitz, of Prince Bay, has a grand stock of the four popular varities of spiræa for Easter. The demand for Gladstone is growing and the stock is extra fine.

H. Frank Darrow is away on a New England trip and reports a prosperous season. His importations are large and include about everything the florist and nurseryman desire.

Mr. Carrillo, of Carrillo & Baldwin, the orchid growers and importers, is now in the cattleya district of Brazil, and writes the prospects for fine shipments are favorable. The importing season will soon be in full swing and this enterprising house will do its share.

The Geller Supply Co. is handling large quantities of wild smilax. The new store is crowded with all the florists' supply requisites and the move to enlarged quarters was wise and profitable.

George Hildebrand, the popular lieutenant with John Young, celebrated his wooden wedding at his home on West Thirtieth street last week Wednesday. His many friends attested their good will in wood of every kind and size and the gathering was a large and happy one.

Wertheimer Bros. will move to convenient headquarters at 550 Broadway February 1. The popularity of this firm is constantly increasing.

Mr. Schumann, of Perkins & Schumann, is an enthusiastic automobilist and was in his element at the big show last week and talking glibly of wheels, sprockets, hubs and sparks. Soon every wholesaler will have his auto to ensure prompt deliveries and every retailer who aspires has one now and couldn't get along without it. Perkins & Schumann expect to increase the size of their store shortly, more room being already a necessity.

The Twenty-eighth street store of Thos. Young, Jr., had a notable decoration at Judge McCall's, on Eighty-sixth street, last week, the halls, parlors, library and dining-room each having its distinct effect with American Beauty, Chatenay, Killarney, Robert Craig and violets. George M. Geraghty is the decorator. The same firm had charge of the family orders for the Dugan funeral, with a casket cover of white roses, and nine large floral pieces, including orchid and violet wreaths and a pillow of Chatenay and valley.

J. K. Allen does not allow even grip to interfere with his invariable nineteen-year-old rule of six o'clock every morning. He has fully recovered and hasn't missed a day in the memory of the wholesale section.

Ford Bros. show with commendable pride a great daily cut of Enchantress and other popular carnations from the big establishment of Henry Hession, of Flatbush. Flatbush should really be renamed Carnationville, when the great growers of the flower are deservedly considered.

B. S. Slinn says it may be carnation week in Toronto, but the violet is king on the ground floor of the Coogan building.

John J. Foley has been ill since before Christmas, at his home, at Madison, but now is convalescing. His illness has been severe.

Bonnet & Blake, in Brooklyn, are handling grand carnation stock from John May and their Long Island growers and some of the finest roses grown in Madison.

The demise of the venerable James Mallon, in Brooklyn, is reported in the obituary column on another page.

Siebrecht & Son are cutting fine stock of Chatenay, Killarney, Richmond and Kate Moulton roses from their own greenhouses, also valley and Trianæ and lælia orchids; of the latter over 300 daily.

Joseph Leikens had a decoration Monday at the residence of C. M. Schwab, the steel magnate, and on Tuesday of this week the Post-Turnbull wedding at church and house, using lilies, forsythia and Japanese quince, an early harbinger of spring.

A. J. Guttman reports he sold from Saturday until Monday, inclusive, over 80,000 violets. The demand from out of town on Monday was phenomenal. There would seem to be no necessity for forbodings on the part of the violet growers up the Hudson. The effort made by some of the unposted editors of the local press of Rhinebeck to disturb the peace of mind of the growers there will fall upon unresponsive ears. The violet industry is but in its swaddling clothes.

Robert G. Wilson, of Brooklyn, fills many out-of-town orders for delivery at Brooklyn theaters or homes. He also has many orders for Long Island and New Jersey. His brother Andrew, at Summit, N. J., has made a great success of his plant oil.

A. Warendorff's window is a dream, with its autos of flowers, its trunks of orchids and baskets of roses. There is never a commonplace display.

Young & Nugent add novelty to artistic arrangement and unique lighting effects in their Twenty-eighth street windows and seem to be always busy.

George Cotsonas & Co. find the complete store at 50 West Twenty-eighth street none too large for their shipping trade. A large force is constantly at work here.

N. LeCakes & Co. find their stands at the Coogan building and the old Thirty-fourth street market still a necessity, in addition to their headquarters at 53 West Twenty-eighth street, where, in addition to everything in green goods, their cut flower department under the management of J. J. Foley is steadily developing.

New York sent a goodly delegation to Toronto Tuesday night. The cold weather might have been expected; it always comes on the week selected for the carnation convention.

J. Austin Shaw.

DENVER.

The Market.

Trade has not been any too strong in some lines, while in others it has been good. We have had a few days of dark weather, which had a bad effect on roses. It seems to have no effect on carnations; consequently there has been a falling off in prices to some extent. Outside demand is good. City trade is not quite up to the standard. Funeral work was quite a factor; consequently white roses were in greater demand and were scarce. Long-stemmed Beauties are not overplentiful and the demand is good for all lengths. The quality is fair. Bridesmaid continues to improve, so that at present some fine stock is to be had. Demand is good. Richmond and Liberty are in crop and are perhaps better than any other roses, though the demand is not so strong, the call being mostly for white and pink roses.

Carnations are in crop with every grower at present and quality in most cases is good, though lack of demand has caused prices to come down to some extent. Violets are good, but not overplentiful at 75 cents, $1 and $1.25 per hundred. Tulips are coming in, but as yet are short in stem and there is not much of a variety.

Various Notes.

J. A. Valentine, N. A. Benson and Emil Glauber left Sunday, January 20, to attend the American Carnation Society convention at Toronto. They go by way of Chicago and Detroit, expecting to visit other of the eastern cities before their return, in about three weeks.

The youngest daughter of C. J. David, the north side florist, died of heart trouble last week, the funeral occurring Friday.

A joint convention of the State Board of Horticulture and the Colorado State Horticultural Society will be held January 25 and 26, in the Chamber of Commerce in this city. A very interesting program has been arranged, as well as a large list of prizes for the different exhibits. One paper to be read will, perhaps, be of interest to the florist and gardener, viz., "Ornamental Shrubs," by W. D. Smith, of the Park Floral Co.

The Florists' Bowling League resumed its play last week and some high scores were made, N. A. Benson having high game, 258, and Charles Benson 226.

C. J. Davis is cutting some fine sweet peas at present.

Harry Berry is now with Emil Glauber, at the Montclair greenhouses.

E. S. K.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Business, with some of the stores, has been quiet, excepting a few good orders of carnations that were furnished each day for the implement dealers, who held their annual convention here last week. These carnations were given to the out-of-town visitors. There was quite a large crowd of them and the hotels were filled to their utmost capacity. The first floor of the convention hall was occupied by exhibits of the implement men and the upper floor by the poultry show. The cackling of the hens and the crowing of the big roosters made music in the air.

The weather has been everything but pleasant, with rain, sleet and snow. On account of so much cloudy weather, stock has been poor and not very plentiful.

Various Notes.

The new location and the prosperous business of the Alpha Floral Co. must have caused its proprietor, Alpha Elberfield, to consider seriously that it is not good to be alone in this world, so he has taken unto himself a wife. He was married Thursday evening, January 17, to Miss Emma Foulke, who has been in his employ for over a year. The happy couple left immediately for Chicago on their honeymoon. The event was quite a surprise to many, but that is what Mr. Elberfield is in the habit of doing, surprising people. We all wish them happiness and success.

Arthur Newell and Samuel Murray left Monday, January 14, for Mexico, where the Mystic Shriners are holding their conclave this week. A special feature of the conclave will be the conferring of the Shriner's degree upon President Diaz of Mexico. As Mr. Newell and Mr. Murray are both Shriners we are sure that they will have an enjoyable time. They will be gone about three weeks.

Lawrence Schwager is with us again in the business. He is now manager for the Grand Avenue Cut Flower Co., located at the corner of Thirteenth street and Grand avenue, where William Bastian was in business.

C. Aangeenbrug, of Warnaar & Co., Sassenheim, Holland; A. Currie, Jr., of Currie Bros. Co., of Milwaukee, and Mr. Augspurger, of D. U. Augspurger & Sons, of Peoria, Ill., were in the city since our last report. W. H. H.

WILTON JUNCTION, IA.—Mailing lists should be corrected to read E. Friederichsen & Sons. They succeeded Friederichsen Bros. three years ago and request the change, as the old name is still appearing in trade lists.

THE DEATH ROLL.

James Mallon.

James Mallon, known in Brooklyn, N. Y., for over fifty years as a florist, and proprietor of the store at Willoughby and Fulton streets, died January 19. Mr. Mallon had been ill for about two weeks and his death was due to a complication of diseases superinduced by old age, he having recently passed his seventy-fifth year.

Mr. Mallon came to this country at the age of 15, with his parents, from County Tyrone, Ireland. His father became engaged in the florists' business, and soon turned it over to the younger man, who started the store at Fulton and Willoughby streets. He later established greenhouses at 20 Smith street and for years was known as the father of the business in the city. About twelve years ago, because of infirmities, he was compelled to give up active business and he turned the store over to his two sons, John P. and Joseph F. Mallon, who have conducted it since.

Although Mr. Mallon did not take an active part, he was at the place of business every day, and during the rush of Christmas week he worked as much as sixteen hours a day. The exertions then, according to the physicians who have attended him, were largely responsible for his weakened condition when attacked by the fatal illness.

Mr. Mallon was married to Miss Bridget Scanlon and they had four children, who now survive. Mrs. Mallon's death occurred little more than a year ago. Beside the two sons who have taken their father's place in the business, they had two daughters—Mrs. Mary Fuery and Mrs. A. G. Piggott.

Since he first came to this country Mr. Mallon has taken a great interest in politics, although he has never held office. His place at Willoughby and Fulton streets was the rendezvous for many of the most prominent men of the city, and to many of them has he proved an adviser, whose words were well worth heeding. The funeral was a large one and there were many flowers.

The death on Saturday, January 19, of the venerable James Mallon, of Brooklyn, one of the oldest and best known florists of the country, was not wholly unexpected, as he has been severely ill since New Year's. He was a man of wonderful energy and devotion to the work he loved so well and to the end his interest was unabated. His reminiscences made a visit to the store where he so long presided, always interesting, and his name and record are a credit to the profession and a proud heritage for those who follow him. His two sons, John and James, Jr., who have long managed the extensive business with their headquarters at the historic corner of Fulton and Willoughby streets, will continue it as usual. Mr. Mallon was highly esteemed by all who knew him and many handsome floral tributes attested the sympathy and respect of the trade.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

George F. Fabyan.

George F. Fabyan, of Brookline, Mass., who died January 18, was a director of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and a generous supporter of that society. The magnificent cyclamens, calceolarias, pelargoniums and other plants grown by James Stuart, his head gardener, have been features at the exhibitions for several years. At the funeral January 21 there was a magnificent display of flowers.

Mrs. R. C. Hooper.

Horticulture in Massachusetts lost another generous patron in the death of Mrs. R. C. Hooper, of Boston, January 13. The deceased lady was a life member of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and was also a strong supporter of the North Shore Horticultural Society. The floral tributes at the funeral, in Arlington street church, January 16, were the most beautiful and costly seen in Boston for years. Orchids were extensively used. Cattleya Trianæ, white forms of Lælia anceps and Phalænopsis amabilis and lily of the valley with Adiantum Farleyense formed the casket cover.

Joseph Mevius.

Joseph Mevius, official city gardener of Hoboken, N. J., for thirty years, died January 16 at his home, 112 Washington street, at the age of 88. It is said he liked his job so well that he often went to work among his flower beds around the city hall at 4 o'clock in the morning, five or six hours before the other city officials put in an appearance.

James Braik.

By the sudden death of James Braik the park board of Buffalo loses one of its oldest officials and the city one of its most untiring public servants. Mr. Braik had been connected with the park system of Buffalo for nearly twenty years. He was appointed assistant superintendent of parks, the position he held at the time of his death, by the late William McMillan. Though Mr. Braik had suffered an attack of rheumatism recently, he seemed to recover from it and resumed his work. On the morning of his death he finished and sent in his annual requisition for spring flowers and flower seeds. A few minutes after Secretary Selkirk had received the requisition, a telephone message announced the sudden death of Mr. Braik.

Mr. Braik was a native of Scotland. He was 58 years old. Before coming to this country he served in the Gordon Highlanders. When the Gordon Highlanders Company of this city was organized, he was made its first captain. He was very well known in Scottish circles. Mr. Braik is survived by his wife. There were no children.

At a special meeting of the Buffalo Florists' Club, the following resolutions were adopted:

That we have heard with profound sorrow of the death of our esteemed associate, James Braik. His long and faithful work in the parks of our city and his upright character have endeared him to his fellow workmen and to the citizens of Buffalo.

In his death the city loses a faithful, competent and enthusiastic servant, and his associates a stanch friend.

KINGSTON, ONT.—The Kingston Horticultural Society has decided to hold a flower show in September.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—The Board of Park Commissioners has allowed money for the construction of a greenhouse 26x100. The stock is to be used to beautify the Oklahoma City park system, which consists of Wheeler park, Stiles park, Military park and Riverside park.

THE TRADE PAPER.

Dear Florists' Review: — Enclosed please find the dollar to renew my subscription. I find great pleasure and profit in reading the Review. It is the only paper in which I really enjoy reading the advertisements. One reason is that I find money in them. But one of the greatest helps I get from the Review is enthusiasm. It is hard to do work that no one else is doing in your vicinity. Isolated florists in small places are very apt to become moss-grown, or if they do not, their stock does, and there is nothing like a good, live paper to brighten them up.

For twenty-one years I have kept account of my sales, and last year I broke all my previous records in amount of business and profit, but I hope to do even better this year. Everything looks bright, but I am still learning and hope always to be. Yours for success,

A. Wakefield.

Waterville, N. Y., January 15, 1907.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

The president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, on assuming office, will be glad to consider any suggestions which may appear to be for the good of the society. Lovers of the autumn queen are invited to communicate their ideas, and the hearty coöperation of every member of the society is most desirable for the accomplishment of the success which should be ours. The year is before us, with all its grand possibilities. Let each one contribute his share of interest, and the good results will be gratifying to us all. Let there be no drones in the hive of the C. S. A. during the year of 1907.

David Fraser, Sec'y.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Cleaning Greenhouse Glass.

I notice in the Review of January 17 that J. P. H. wants to clean the roof of his greenhouses and has tried lye and soap powder with no effect. I know of one thing that will clean it, with no bad effects if done right. Get a carboy of muriatic acid, as in quantity it is generally stronger. Use a wooden pail. Then start with a quart to one pailful of hot water and keep adding the acid until you can see the results. Get a long pole and a bunch of rags on the end, to answer as a mop. Then keep going over the glass, giving the acid time to eat up the dirt. Have the hose ready for a washdown. If it proves too weak, use stronger acid and throw on some salt. That will hold it and make a slush. Let it stand a while, or keep rubbing, then wash off.

I have used the pure acid and covered twenty feet of the roof at a time, salting as I went along. It will remove any old thing and by attention will do little harm to the wood, paint or putty. Keep plenty of water running in the gutter, to take the acid away. Also look out for plants, such as palms, etc., as a single drop will burn badly.

Wilson M. Tiplady.

In regard to J. P. H. wanting to know how to clean greenhouse glass, I can give him a bit of information that will probably be appreciated by a good many who have smoky glass to clean. What I have used is muriatic acid. Use one gallon of acid to four gallons of water. You can put it on with a stick with rags tied to it; but the best way is to get a pair of rubber gloves and get right on the glass and put it on by hand. The acid will not affect the rubber, but it would your hands. You can leave the acid on the glass about fifteen minutes, then wash it off and you will find your glass as clear as crystal.

If you have any paint on the glass you want to use strong lye first, as the acid will not affect the paint, nor will the lye affect the smoke. I have soaked smoky glass in lye for two weeks and the only way you can get it clean is with salt and water, which I used to use before I caught on to the acid.

Our worthy brother, W. S., will kindly excuse me for saying that lye will not remove smoke. I am talking about the dirty, greasy Chicago soft coal smoke, and if he has any smoked glass I wish he would try the acid and let us know how he likes it. You can buy the acid of any wholesale druggist. It comes about ten gallons put up in a glass bottle. The price in Chicago is 21 cents per gallon. They charge $1.50 extra for the bottle. Always keep your acid in a cool place and never put it in anything but wooden pails. J. B.

COUNCIL OF HORTICULTURE.

The first installment of the 1907 service of the National Council of Horticulture's press bureau was distributed the current week by James Burdett, 1726 W. One Hundred and Fourth place, Chicago, to a greatly enlarged mailing list. It consisted of four articles prepared by volunteers under the direction of Prof. H. C. Irish, secretary of the society, as follows: "The Modern Gladiolus," "Poppies," "Designing a Planting Scheme," and "Evergreens for Ornament."

It is earnestly desired that the names of newspapers to which contributors wish this service to be sent, or which express a desire for the service, be sent to Mr. Burdett, in order to make the mailing list as efficient as possible. As soon as possible a schedule of articles, with the dates on which they are to be distributed, will be issued for the benefit of those who wish to advertise.

As it has been suggested by some contributors to the council's press service that they would like to advertise in some of the newspapers using the service, the following list is issued of newspapers that used the service last year and have expressed themselves as wishing to have it continued:

The News League of Ohio, including Dayton Daily News and Springfield Daily News; Louisville Times; Spokane (Wash.) Spokesman-Review; Madison (Wis.) Democrat, and the string of papers served by it with plate matter; St. Louis Globe-Democrat, semi-weekly edition; St. Louis Star-Chronicle; Cleveland Press, and about thirty other papers served by the Newspaper Enterprise Association of Cleveland; Philadelphia Evening Bulletin; Memphis Commercial-Appeal; Chicago Tribune; Chicago Daily News; Washington Evening Star; Worcester (Mass.) Evening Gazette; Brooklyn Daily Eagle; Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald; Ohio State Journal, Columbus, O.; Kansas City Star; Milwaukee Journal; Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin; The News, Buffalo; Cincinnati Gazette, published by Commercial Tribune Co.; Twentieth Century Farmer, weekly publication of the Omaha Bee, and Minneapolis Tribune.

The Kellogg Newspaper Co., Chicago; the American Newspaper Union, New York, and the Chicago Newspaper Union, Chicago, have supplied their subscribers, numbering several thousands, which they have classified in various lists covering certain territory.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The weather has been the sole topic of conversation in the last week. For three days following last report it rained almost continuously. The only time the sun came out it put the plants in a Turkish bath. The temperature was around 60 degrees Saturday afternoon and since January 1 we have had 220 degrees of excess heat. Saturday night winter came and the temperature fell to within 8 degrees of zero in less than twelve hours. At the same time the wind attained a velocity of fifty-five miles an hour.

The long spell of dark weather caused the plants to stand practically still. The result was particularly manifest in the rose market, good roses becoming quite scarce and advancing in price. The call for funeral work made an active demand for shorts and everything in the rose line moved off quickly. White roses were difficult to procure all last week and there is no change this week. The sudden cold did not do much toward retarding the cut, for the crop was about the lowest ebb anyway, but it gave the growers a chance to test the heating apparatus. A 55-mile breeze at 8 degrees above zero, with houses none too well glazed, is no joke.

Conditions are not good for large production, especially in the rose line, for some time to come. The plants are too soft to respond quickly to better growing conditions; indeed, strong sun would be likely to do much damage in the weakened condition of the stock.

Carnations are in a little better shape and are producing more freely than roses. There is an excellent call for white, so that it is not always possible to supply these. Enchantress is more abundant than any other and sells well. Lawson is not the color mostly wanted and is the last to go.

Considerable quantities of tulips now are available. There are plenty of white and a few red and yellow are seen. Paper Whites are abundant. Callas are in larger supply and occasionally considerable quantities of Harrisii are seen. Freesia has been in for two or three weeks, but is not yet abundant enough so that it cuts much figure. Jonquils clean up quickly, but there is enough valley.

The receipts of violets are less than usual at this season, but there are enough to meet all needs. Poinsettias still are seen in some quantity but are poor and do not sell.

There is an excellent demand for bunched greens. Ferns are causing much trouble.

Benthey's to Move.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. has closed a lease for new quarters on the second floor of the Atlas block, the large corner room, No. 202, a space the agents have not heretofore been willing to rent for florists' purposes. The room is ample in size, glass on the two street sides and on the same floor with six other wholesale florists. It is a fine location and, the last tenant having vacated, will be occupied at once.

As soon as the Benthey-Coatsworth Co. leaves its old quarters the partition will be removed, adding the space to that of the Poehlmann Bros. Co. The Poehlmann Co. is badly in need of more room and will rearrange the store to take full advantage of the doubled space. It is expected to have all the changes made in time to be ready for the Easter rush and the heavy spring cuts.

The Toronto Party.

The Chicago party to the Toronto convention pulled out twenty minutes late on a cold afternoon Tuesday. Those in the special car were C. L. Washburn, P. J. Hauswirth, Mrs. Hauswirth, George Asmus, August Poehlmann, Adolph Poehlmann and J. S. Wilson, Chicago; A. S. Halsted, Belleville, Ill.; N. Zweifel and J. E. Pollworth, Milwaukee; A. T. Pyfer, Peter Olsem and A. F. Longren, Joliet. Leonard Kill and Mrs. Kill had gone in advance, Sunday evening.

At Detroit the party was joined by the Cincinnati and Detroit delegations, making a full carload.

Troubles at Park Ridge.

It is reported several of the Park Ridge growers, who are all in a bunch, were in trouble Saturday and Sunday as a result of the heavy rain. Water got into the boiler-pits and put out the fires. It is said August Priebs was bady frozen. Wm. Passvogle had a narrow escape and Wm. Nieman, at Norwood Park, had a close call. Others had to pump to save themselves serious loss.

Virginian Narcissi.

Stollery Bros. have been cutting Narcissus princeps (Ajax) for a fortnight and are now marketing a nice lot, from bulbs grown in Virginia, by the American Bulb Co., from whom they took 25,000 narcissus bulbs last summer. They have done well and are small bulbs, so that little space is occupied, but the fact that only one flower per bulb is produced makes it questionable if they are more profitable than the best double-nosed Holland bulbs, which can be had at about the same cost, laid down in Chicago. "Big Pete" Sroczyiski, on Harding avenue, also took 25,000 narcissi from the same lot as the Stollery's, but has not done well with them. His soil is heavy; the Stollery's light. Also, he has grown them warmer than did Stollery Bros., and a large proportion came blind.

Various Notes.

It is reported that H. F. Halle, who long has contemplated opening a store on the north side, would like to start in the building on North Halsted street recently erected by Albert Fuchs, in which there is a fine corner store; and Mr. Fuchs would like to have Mr. Halle for a tenant. The hitch comes in that when Mr. Fuchs leased his old stand to Henry Koropp for fifty years a clause was inserted that no other store on the property was to be let for florists' purposes. Mr. Koropp says he will stand for his rights.

Joseph P. Brooks, who has the George Harrer place at Morton Grove, has a fine white sport of Enchantress. He grows The Queen, Lawson, Nelson Fisher, Crusader and Enchantress. The stock is in fine shape and there is a heavy crop nearly ready.

Joseph Foerster, of George Reinberg's, reports having taken a single order for 10,000 unrooted cuttings of the standard varieties of carnations.

H. Wehrman, at Maywood, is perparing to build three new houses, each 26x150, and modernize two old ones. He will replace his hot water system with steam. He grows carnations, shipping to E. C. Amling.

February 1 J. H. Grohosky will open a retail store at 1319 Sheridan road, Irving Park. He will do business as the North Shore Flower Shop and will have the backing of his father's greenhouses at 1334 Wolfram street.

The Horticultural Society will make another attempt, January 30, to elect officers. It is stated that President E. G. Uihlein is willing to accept reëlection, but that W. N. Rudd feels he has earned a rest as secretary and treasurer.

Bassett & Washburn report a great run on rooted cuttings of the white carnation, The Queen, but note that practically every order is from the east. They have sold all the cuttings of this sort they can root in the next six weeks.

Adam Zender says both rose and carnation crops are away below what they should be and that the health of the plants is so weakened by the bad weather that he sees little prospect of a profit this year. He is cutting 3,000 a week fewer roses than a year ago. Fortunately, he does not specially "need the money."

Mike Fink, at Twenty-second and Cottage Grove avenue, has given up the idea of selling out. His father wants to take him into the growing end but Mr. Fink says he cannot get a fair price for his business because would-be buyers are afraid of the high rents in that neighborhood. Nevertheless, he is having a good trade and making money steadily.

N. J. Wietor says that his firm will this year confine its investment in new carnations to 1,000 each of Aristocrat and Winsor.

C. W. McKellar has added cyclamen plants to his repertoire, one of his growers having a fine lot to dispose of.

A. Elberfield and his wife, of Kansas City, were in town last week on their wedding trip.

Kennicott Bros. Co. expects to begin moving the latter end of this week to the new store at 48 Wabash. The improvements in the building, made for their benefit, are nearly completed.

Wietor Bros. say they find To-bak-ine the best nicotine extract for spraying purposes.

Prof. A. C. Beal was up from Urbana last week to push along the work for an appropriation for experiment greenhouses at the state agricultural college. The matter will be before the legislature in March.

IN THE TWELVE MONTHS OF 1906 OUR GROSS SALES INCREASED OVER

$20,000

AS COMPARED WITH 1905--AND 1905 WAS UP TO THIS YEAR CONSIDERABLY THE BEST IN OUR TEN YEARS OF STEADY PROGRESS

To us the continued increase in our business—an increase faster now than at any time in our experience—is the best of evidence that in our methods of conducting our business. It proves we are giving satisfaction to both seller and buyer. We must have them both in our business.

Many times we have been tempted to branch out—but second thought has convinced us that it is to our best interests (our interests are the same as those of our shippers and customers) to devote all our time, energy, ability and ambition to pushing one line.

ONE IRON IN THE FIRE AT A TIME IS ALL ANY MAN CAN KEEP HOTTEST

We believe ours is the only wholesale Cut Flower house in the west that has no side lines to take up time and attention. Nothing but the one idea of handling to the best advantage, every flower received—passing the stock on to the retailers in such shape that it gives the best of satisfaction, and at the same time brings the grower its full value.

OUR PURPOSE

has been, is, and will be, to carry a full line of Cut Flowers—everything the market affords. To maintain our reputation for handling the best average grade of stock in this market. To deal on the most conservative business principles and treat every shipper and every buyer so fairly and squarely that 1907 will show another handsome increase in sales of Cut Flowers alone.

He says it is the first time this season they have been preferred to the best Hudson river stock.

W. N. Rudd sends all his carnations to the E. F. Winterson Co., loose, packed 100 in pasteboard boxes instead of being bunched. All breakage is avoided and Mr. Rudd thinks the better condition of the stock amply repays for the little extra work.

L. Coatsworth has spent several days at home, ill with a cold.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. have been experimenting with the keeping quality of carnations as the result of a complaint of flowers arriving sleepy. A box of 100, four varieties, was packed and wrapped as for a long shipment and the box stowed away under a counter for two days. When opened the flowers were fresh and kept two days longer in a pot of water. In nearly every case sleepy flowers may be laid to heating in transit.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Weeks, yes, months of damp, cloudy, changeable weather have carried off many old people through grip, pneumonia and lung troubles. This has created an unusual demand for funeral work, taxing the store men's resources to the limit. At times were it not for that godsend, the galax leaf, it would be a hard matter to fill orders. Many parties, weddings and gifts for the sick are also drawing on the market and, although considerable stock arrives despite the unfavorable weather, the demand usually exceeds the supply.

Beauties are nearly out of the question. Good Brides are quite plentiful; pink and red are scarce. A few fine La Detroit arrive, but are bought up at once. The prices on roses are from $6 to $14.

Carnations are cleaned up well, except the deep pink, and even these do not go to waste. Enchantress carnations are in great demand. Lilies are scarce. Valley is used in large quantity and sells at $3 to $5. Paper White narcissi are used extensively, as also are Roman hyacinths.

Tulips have put in their appearance, but, excepting white and some pale pink, do not sell well. Violets sell fairly well. The eastern violets are too high priced for this market at this time of the year.

With but a few weeks in which to prepare for Easter, and the weather man reluctant about helping the florists, chances are that there will be a scarcity of stock. Of azaleas, roses, miscellaneous plants and bulbous stock, no doubt there will be enough, but lilies will, no doubt, be scarce. The plants are low and in most cases far behind.

Club Meeting.

The regular meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club was held January 16, with an unusually large attendance. Henry Raus, Richard Went and Henry Becker were elected to membership. The application for membership of Louis F. Tossy was received.

George Rackham made a motion that in case of the death of a member or one of his immediate family it be left in the hands of the president, secretary and treasurer to send a floral emblem, the same to bear a card expressing the club's sympathy. This was approved. The treasurer's report showed a neat little balance at the bank.

E. A. Scribner was given a vote of thanks for a paper, "The Trials and Tribulations of Detroit Florists." Quite a lengthy discussion followed, during which all of the old troubles were rehashed, such as slow accounts, boarder plants, price cutting, etc., with the final decision that there is no remedy for these trials, and if there were, others equally as bad or worse would arise.

Owing to Thomas Brown's absence O. A. Stoll was appointed a member of the exhibition committee. This committee is making arrangements for a carnation show for February 6. Outsiders are requested to send any novelties they may have. Address in care of the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange.

The entertainment committee received instructions to arrange for a ladies' night in February. Chairman William Brown is a hustler and, judging from the smile on his face, he has a surprise in store for us.

Michigan Cut Flower Exchange.

The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange has been incorporated, with the following stockholders: Philip Breitmeyer, Fred Breitmeyer, William Dilger and Robert Rahaley. The papers have just come back from Lansing and, upon Mr. Breitmeyer's return to the city, officers will be elected.

way, with a few hundred dollars capital, business dragged for a time. A cut flower commission house was a new venture in this vicinity and the growers, as well as the retailers, hung back for a time, especially as it was under control of a retail florist. But everything was run on the square from the start and this, coupled to Mr. Breitmeyer's good credit, soon put life into the business. It was not long before they outgrew the small quarters and moved to the present location, a light, spacious basement at 38 and 40 Broadway. Here will be found every known facility for handling the cut flower and supply business. They number among their consignors many of the best growers in this vicinity.

Philip and Fred Breitmeyer need no introduction. William Dilger, the manager, is also well known to the trade. Robert M. Rahaley has been with the firm as bookkeeper and general utility man for some time and, through good business ability and hard work, has climbed up the ladder and is now acting manager, as Mr. Dilger is busy elsewhere.

Various Notes.

Ed Beard suffered a severe attack of grip at Christmas and, although up and around at times, he has been ailing ever since.

A neat little pin in the shape of a rose leaf bearing the initials L. S. A. F. will identify the members of the ladies' auxiliary of our national society. Although in its infancy, there are already over thirty members enrolled.

Charles H. Plumb is contemplating the erection of a new range of about 25,000 feet of glass this spring. The two large boilers installed in 1905 have ample heating capacity to take care of this extra glass. Some roses and carnations are grown by Mr. Plumb, but at present he goes more extensively into bulbous stock and blooming plants. A large batch of lilies is coming on nicely for Easter. No more Harrisii lilies for this concern. Sixty per cent are a loss. Mr. Plumb has a fine sport of Enchantress of a Lawson color.

Philip Breitmeyer went on a southern trip last week in the interest of the park board.

J. F. Sullivan has a large batch of multiflorum lilies coming along, although they cannot afford to lose any time. A house of Killarney roses shows up finely. Paper Whites are being used extensively in Detroit this season and Sullivan's have a whole houseful to fall back on.

F. Holznagle, of Highland Park, is seldom seen at the club meetings or about Detroit, for he is an exceedingly busy man. Besides being president of the village, he has a large range of glass to look after. At one time everything was strictly wholesale, but with fine residences springing up all around him, Mr. Holznagle has a rapidly increasing retail trade. The modern houses, erected last summer, are devoted to carnations. The old houses are being gradually remodeled, cement benches being used throughout. The boilers are housed in a spacious, light, brick building, having besides the boiler room a capacity of about 100 tons of coal. A neat washroom is provided for the help. A 100-foot brick stack, bearing the sign "Roses," attracts attention from a distance.

B. Schroeter furnished the flowers for the family at the funeral of the late Frederick Stearns. These included a cover of valley and white roses and a large wreath of orchids. Orchids are becoming more in vogue in this city and Mr. Schroeter's large collection is bringing him some nice returns.

John Breitmeyer's Sons furnished the decorations for the Boyer-Backus wedding. This was one of the swell affairs of the season and the decorations were very elaborate, each room being decorated in a different color.

A gale visited this city January 19 and took with it one of the large show windows in John Breitmeyer's Sons' store. The nightman immediately closed the opening with carpets, so not much damage was done.

The J. C. Moninger Co. has the contract, and has already drawn plans, for a house 65x100 to be erected for August Von Boeselager, at Mount Clemens. The house is to be devoted to carnations. Nine solid benches with sides of cement and tile will be used.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

"We are great growers, the sun and we, especially the sun." Every grower felt the truth of these words last week, which was absolutely sunless. Possibly we were not so badly off as in Pittsburg, where even daylight was missing for thirty-six hours, so we are told. But at any rate, production was cut down, and with an increased demand the market improved, prices stiffening decidedly on roses. This week the improvement continues, and, with the aid of the blessed sun, we are getting more flowers, of decidedly better quality. Quotations are rather deceptive now, for, while prices on poor stock, which is plentiful, are low, figures paid for really fancy tea roses are often considerably above those listed. Valley is in good demand; the advent of the new crop gives us better bells, though the stems are not yet especially long. Freesia is fine, the pure white averaging better prices than the yellow, or perhaps it would be fair to say, yellow-splashed flowers. Lilac is selling well; the fancy grade can now be seen at some of the commission houses. Fancy mignonette is in better demand than the ordinary stock. Violets at market prices are now in good demand. Tulips have made their appearance in quantity, Yellow Prince reinforcing La Reine this week. An important addition to the daffodil class is Golden Spur, which is very good. Southern grown plumosus and Sprengeri are now the best in the market.

Gardenias.

There is an old saying that no man is a prophet in his own country, but if Phil can help it, the achievement of Alex. B. Scott in producing gardenias in quantity during midwinter shall not pass unnoticed. For many years this has proved an impossible task, but Mr. Scott has at last cut the gordian knot. It is freely admitted by at least four of the best gardenia growers in the country, who have visited Sharon Hill, that Mr. Scott's house is in advance of anything yet seen in this country. The flowers, which are of excellent quality, have been seen at the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. and at Edw. Reid's in quantity, since Christmas. Mr. Scott deserves the hearty congratulations of all flower lovers on his difficult achievement.

The Ferns at Dreer's.

James T. Clark was ready at the time appointed to show Phil the fern department at Riverton, a department of prime importance, where the stock is practically entirely home-grown and is offered in every size, from seedlings in flats to perfect specimens in large pots.

First, just a word about Mr. Clark, whose knowledge of ferns, virtually but two years old, now places him in the front rank. Second only to knowledge, he has pluck and push, indispensable adjuncts where results are to be attained. The fern houses were in fine condition, every bench full of good stock, something to be proud of just after such brisk demand. Among nephrolepis five varieties are planted out for stock: Bostoniensis, still considered an important factor; Scottii, Elegantissima, Barrowsii, and Whitmani, classed as the best of the fancy-leaved types. A single plant, now divided, of the English variety, Todeaoides, was an object of interest. This sort, as its name implies, resembles a todea. This variety may be seen in Horticultural hall, Fairmount park. It is a pretty thing. The quantity of each variety grown for stock proves that a steady demand is expected for some time to come. It is stated that at present market prices it is more profitable to buy nephrolepis in small sizes than to grow one's own stock, while well-grown plants in the larger sizes are always in demand. It is only by handling such large quantities that the 2¼-inch sizes can be profitably grown at prevailing prices.

The stock of ferns for ferneries is large and varied. There are large numbers of all the best sorts. Among them the pteris family, of course, figures prominently, in 2¼-inch pots, with some of the more popular kinds in 3-inch and even in 4-inch pots. Several varieties of cyrtomiums are grown. The business of selling these ferns in flats is increasing rapidly. Commenting on it, Mr. Clark thought it profitable and believed small ferns at the low market prices were more profitable than Adiantum Farleyense in 6-inch pots at $1 each. This is significant when the fine quality of the A. Farleyense grown here this season is considered. The aim in these small ferns is to be able to fill an order for 100 varieties at any time. This can undoubtedly be done now, though were it not for the labels it would take a pretty bright man to pick and name them correctly.

Cibotium Schiedei and Adiantum Ferleyense have yielded their choicest specimens to the holiday buyers. There are some plants of each rounding into form. A nice batch of Nephrolepis Scottii in 6-inch pots suspended from the rafters were ready to offer, while a block of Whitmani in the same size on the benches showed how this variety ought to be grown. Better go and see them.

Various Notes.

W. E. McKissick, who is receiving a nice lot of Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri from the south, says that he finds tnat the southern grown sprays of the last named variety will keep over twice as long as the greenhouse-grown stock.

John C. Andre, of Doylestown, is adding a new boiler and will make other extensive improvements to his plant.

Myers & Samtman, of Wyndmoor, will rearrange their place so that it will hold 30,000 American Beauty roses next season. This will be nearly 4,000 more than at present.

Victor Groshens, late of Logan, is for the time being in charge of the greenhouses of the estate of Albert Woltemate.

S. S. Skidelsky has received many letters of congratulation on his able paper read before the Florists' Club New Year's day. The interest in his subject is general.

F. & H. Mergenthaler have some carnations on their Washington Lane place that reflect credit on the grower, Lockman.

Eugene Bernheimer is receiving the congratulations of his friends on the arrival of a dear little stranger laddie.

Edward Reid says that his judgment in recommending the New York violet is being fully justified. Mr. Reid reports an increased demand for gardenias. No wonder!

Carnation Night in Philadelphia.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia will be Carnation night, the date of which is Tuesday, February 5. John E. Haines, the carnation expert of Bethlehem, Pa., will deliver a paper on his experiences with carnations.

Exhibits of all meritorious novelties are invited by the committee in charge and it is to be hoped all the very best will be on hand, so that the progressive florists of Philadelphia—the horticultural center of the country—may have an opportunity of examining them carefully, and as a consequence placing their generous orders for those which meet their fancy. Please ship prepaid care David Rust, Horticultural hall, Broad street above Spruce, Philadelphia, Pa., and they will be properly taken care of upon arrival. It would be better to forward them a day sooner than is sometimes thought necessary, so that they may be sure to arrive on time, as on former occasions some shipments from a distance have been delivered a day late.

All interested in carnations are invited to be present, whether or not they have superior varieties to exhibit.

EDWIN LONSDALE, Sec'y.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The cut flower trade has remained steady during the last week, although the weather was disagreeable. No sunshine and plenty of rain shortened up the supply of roses and violets. Prices remain about the same as quoted last week. Quite a lot of society work was made up among the uptown florists; also considerable funeral work was reported at the downtown florists'. At the wholesale houses Monday morning carnations were plentiful and at reduced prices in large lots. Stock is all of fine quality.

Roses were not plentiful. Beauties are scarce in all grades. The same may be said of Bride, Maid, Richmond and others. There are more violets than the demand calls for. Should we have bright weather this week a big glut in Californias may be looked for and prices will go begging in all grades. Bulb stock has been in fair demand all of the week. This stock has been plentiful and is yet, especially in Romans and Paper Whites. Freesias are coming in, but not many. Valley has been a good seller up to a week ago, but is dragging at present. There are plenty of greens.

for a quorum, only an executive meeting was held and it was decided to hold a spring flower show, with full details to be made known later. The month of March was set for the exhibition.

John Connon, of Webster Groves, will build a large building at the corner of his place to be used by the government as the Webster Groves post-office.

Mary Ostertag has moved her store from Grand avenue and Olive street to Olive street and Vandeventer avenue, the old stand to be wrecked and replaced by a large office building.

The St. Louis Palm Co., doing business at 1010 Olive street for some time, has gone out of business.

C. A. Kuehn, A. Y. Ellison and J. J. Beneke bowled last week in the city tenpin tournament and are well up in the race for prizes.

The trustees of the Florists' Club met and have decided on the prizes for the carnation show at the next meeting, February 14. The awards will be $5 and $3 for first and second in twenty-five each red, light pink, rose pink, dark pink, white and variegated, with $2 for third best red. The prizes are only open for local growers and club members. The exhibition part is open to all growers who have new varieties to introduce. The trustees will make an effort to reach every member of the club and request his attendance on this occasion. This exhibition and meeting will be held in the Burlington building, 810 Olive street, eighth floor.

Phil. Breitmeyer, as park commissioner, and his secretary, M. D. Hulbert, of Detroit, spent Monday, January 19, in St. Louis in company with Commissioner Robert Aull, Secretary Duffy, Superintendent Ostertag and J. J. Beneke. After visiting Mayor Wells and other heads in our city departments, a visit to the different parks was made in an automobile. The party left on the 8:30 Wabash train, each having in his possession a Teddy bear to take home as a souvenir. J. J. B.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

For the last few weeks we have had mild weather, but cloudy all the time; consequently little stock has been cut. At present, however, we are experiencing our first really cold weather, the thermometer registering 12 degrees below zero with a high wind blowing, but there is plenty of sunshine, which will work wonders as long as it lasts.

Stock is still scarce and good stock is practically impossible to get. The prices on this account rule high. None of the dealers is selling roses for less than $1.50 per dozen and good roses at $2 and $2.50 per dozen. Carnations are only fairly plentiful, although a great many splits are on the market. There is a scarcity of white varieties. Bulbous stock falls in nicely. Violets are an uncertain quantity. Some days shipments will arrive in splendid condition and the day following they will reach us in a very inferior state. Mignonette has made its appearance, but the demand is light.

Sunday morning business seems to about equal sales of any ordinary day, deliveries with the larger retailers being heavy and, in some cases, they are busy right up to closing up time, which is 1 o'clock.

Minneapolis.

A visit to the E. Nagel greenhouses finds stock in good condition and good average cuts being made on roses and carnations. Mr. Nagel says that his section of the city has grown so fast in the last few years that he does not find it necessary to have a store downtown. In addition to his greenhouse business, he is now engaged in the manufacturing of wood plant labels.

The Twin City Pottery Manufacturing Co. seems to be in a flourishing condition. All of the growers in the twin cities are patronizing it as liberally as possible. For a number of years we had no means of getting pots, only as we had them shipped in. Now a telephone order will bring them.

Miss H. B. Whitted states that trade has kept up nicely. Funeral work has been the main feature. She complains of the poor stock on the market.

Carlson & Swanson seem to have been fortunate so far this season in having good cuts of roses. Their Maids and Brides are fine.

Will & Son have been cutting some fine carnations, which find a ready market with one of the largest retailers.

St. Paul.

E. F. Lemke is cutting some fine Enchantress and Lawson. Trade, he says, has been quite active the last week.

Holm & Olson are gradually getting their large store in good shape. Owing to the immense space it covers, they were compelled to order a number of new fixtures, which had to be made to order, and which delayed them to some extent. They report trade as being good, especially in funeral work.

C. F. Vogt has done well the last week, having turned out more funeral designs than in any week for some time. His designs for the Heck funeral were artistically made up, all large pieces.

FELIX.

WILKES-BARRE, PA.—About $100 damage was done to the greenhouse of Ira G. Marvin January 14 by fire which originated in the boiler-room from an overheated drum.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

The market the last week was on the clearing point. Carnations were more scarce than expected and brought $4 to $5 per hundred. Roman hyacinths and Paper White narcissi were flooding the commission houses and were bringing usual prices. Violets are plentiful and sell for $1.50 per hundred. Tulips are coming in, but not much can be said in their favor as yet.

Various Notes.

A trip to the establishment of the Storrs & Harrison Co. found many things of interest to the trade. They have an immense lot of roses in small pots for their spring trade. Ed George showed me a lot of tree Baby Ramblers, grafted on standards. These make a nice summer ornament. He also has some on Manetti, which make a stronger and bushier growth than is seen generally. Their palms are good and I don't think they can be beaten. This firm also imports an enormous lot of hardy azaleas and rhododendrons, for which they find a ready sale. Whitmani ferns are grown here on a large scale and are in fine shape. Mr. George spoke of remodeling one-half of their entire establishment the coming summer.

Oscar Theile, of Eddy road, has purchased some property on the outskirts of the west side and it is said he will erect a new establishment.

Bate Bros. have one entire house devoted to sweet peas. Some of the best Asparagus plumosus which comes to the Cleveland market is here seen in abundance. Bate Bros. are making preparations for a large stock of roses the coming year.

Mr. Bartells, of Dover, O., has eleven 200-foot houses planted entirely to carnations. His place is what formerly was known as the Essex Greenhouses.

Mrs. Ella Grant Wilson is reopening her greenhouses.

Visitors the past week: C. Schwake, with Charles F. Meyer; C. B. Knickman, of McHutchinson & Co., both of New York. W. G. N.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Current Comment.

January 1 witnessed many changes among the florists in this city and every move is an indication of prosperous business.

Miss E. Birn, for many years on Church street, has moved to Spruce street, near Broad street. A visit to her store shows that the place is well equipped to take care of the business. The large ice-box across the rear of the store is a beauty and the stock of pot plants and cut flowers is in excellent condition and tastefully arranged.

The Joy & Son Co. was obliged, by increased business and lack of room in the old stand at 600 Church street, to move to No. 601, directly opposite, which was done January 1. When the carpenters and painters have finished, this firm will have a store that Nashville will be proud of. The store will be finished in white and gold, with full glass front, the refrigerator running lengthwise of the building. Across the middle, from side to side, will be the showcases, with glass fronts. The windows will be extended outward four feet, making a swell front. Among the many designs ready for delivery last Sunday by this firm was a casket cover in which violets and lilies of the valley were used exclusively.

Still another firm to move is Geny Bros., who, after February 1, will occupy the whole of the present store, the tailoring establishment in the other half moving next door. They have been cramped for room and the change will be a welcome one to this enterprising firm.

C. A. Birn is building up a nice business at his stand on Broad street.

A. J. McBride has opened a retail store on Broad street, next door to C. A. Birn.

The State Fair Association intends to extend its list of prizes for this year, besides furnishing a special building for the horticultural exhibits. J. S.

DUNNVILLE, ONT., CAN.—L. H. Weaver intends building two carnation houses, 14x90 and 20x100 respectively, as soon as spring opens.

BOSTON.

The Market.

January is proving itself an almost sunless month. The last week has been an especially dark one and production has been seriously curtailed as a consequence. Cut flower prices have advanced sharply, especially in the case of roses, in which there has been almost a famine. These have brought Christmas prices and even more in the short-stemmed classes. Brides and Maids, which are usually procurable in quantity at $3 to $4 per hundred, advanced to $8 and the better grades sold as high as $3 to $4 per dozen. Beauties are scarce and the best have made $9 to $12 per dozen. Killarney continues popular and is being more and more used. Prices on this, as well as Chatenay, Wellesley and other sorts, are all much higher. Richmonds are proving great sellers and are far more used in funeral designs than Beauties. A few warm, clear days will cause a slump, but with continued dark skies high prices must continue. One prominent retailer is buying heavily in New York to offset the local deficiency.

Carnations are somewhat higher, but about enough are coming in for needs. Violets are not keeping up like other flowers; 75 cents seems to be top price, and a good many are disposed of at 50 cents per hundred, or even less. Singles still sell the best. Callas and Easter lilies are not overplentiful. Freesias sell well. Dutch bulbous stock never sold better. Prices on tulips and narcissi are good for the season. Fewer growers are bringing in Romans and Paper Whites and as a consequence ice-chests are not loaded with these as in former years. Some good mignonette and antirrhinum are seen. In the way of choicer flowers, gardenias are meeting with good sales at the better class stores and cattleyas, chiefly Trianæ, are being used a good deal for funerals. Cypripediums insigne and villosum are seen in quantity.

Various Notes.

A. A. Hixon, of Worcester, lectured at Horticultural hall January 19, his subject being "Peach Growing in New England." There were also short and practical papers on the same subject by Messrs. Morse and Parker. The papers and discussion occupied over two hours and were very interesting and instructive.

January 26 John E. Lager, Summit, N. J., will lecture at Horticultural hall on "Orchid Collecting," and is certain to have a large audience.

The new Begonia Gloire de Lorraine superba, shown by Farquhar & Co. at the club meeting January 15, is quite distinct from others of the Lorraine class. The flowers are double the usual size and are produced less densely on the plant. James Farquhar thinks it will usurp the place occupied by other forms and expects to have 10,000 plants of it next season.

M. A. Patten, W. Nicholson, S. J. Goddard and E. A. Peirce are among those bound for the Toronto convention this week.

Robert Cameron, who sailed for Jamaica December 26, was fortunately away from the earthquake zone before the calamitous disaster of January 14 occurred.

T. F. Galvin has been making a series of window displays of orchids at his Tremont street store which attract much attention.

A paper on "Road Construction" will be read at the next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club by Charles W. Ross, of Newton. The date is February 19 and other attractions will be announced later.

The present winter has proved an unusual one for overcast skies. January 17 it was below zero many degrees, with blizzardy snow. January 20 the temperature rose to 60 degrees in the shade and all snow disappeared. Carnation growers report an unusual amount of black spot as a result of the dark, damp weather.

Notice of the death of Mrs. R. C. Hooper, who died January 13, and of George F. Fabyan, who died January 18, will be found under "The Death Roll" in another column.

William Sim is having good success with James Wheeler's new violet, Boston, a sport from Princess of Wales, and it promises to become a popular commercial variety.

Peter Fisher's new scarlet carnation, Beacon, promises to be largely grown in this section another season. All who have seen it growing pronounce it a wonder. Rose-pink Enchantress and Winsor will be bought in quantity and more White Perfection will be grown. The last named has proved itself the best of its color to date.

Fire at the store of Penn Bros. early Tuesday, January 22, destroyed many fine floral designs prepared for a large funeral.

Peter Fisher is ill with rheumatism and was unable to go to Toronto, as contemplated.

Wednesday morning, with zero temperature, saw stocks scarce and prices high.

W. E. Doyle made some especially fine designs for the funeral of Mrs. R. C. Hooper January 16. W. N. Craig.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

The United States Cut Flower Co., of Elmira, N. Y., had a heavy crop of Beauties for the holidays. Richard King, the foreman, says demand was good and everything cleaned up. Richmond, Bride and Bridesmaid, in the second year, are yielding well and will be run another season. Solid beds with tile drainage are adopted with success. Carnation Lady Bountiful is a standard white, being an early and continuous bloomer. Lawson is fine and the best of its color, but Skidelsky's Rose-pink Enchantress is freer and bids fair to eclipse its parent. Harlowarden is the best crimson. The houses are regulation length, 200 feet. Additional glass will be erected in the spring to meet the increasing shipping business.

Alfred Patrick, of Auburn, N. Y., finished his new houses in time to take care of his holiday business. Poinsettias were the best sellers in pans and as combination plants.

W. J. Palmer & Son, at Buffalo, N. Y., had a great run on their Red Lawson carnation, both store windows being filled with this splendid variety.

A. H. Woeppel, of Corning, N. Y., reports the best business yet experienced and the sale of flowering plants on the increase. Part of the new range was turned into a showhouse and attracted a host of visitors.

W. A. Wettlin, of Hornellsville, N. Y., is making the contemplated change in his store, which will give a handsome frontage. Holiday business was encouraging. Here, as elsewhere, the high prices of cut flowers increased the sale of potted plants.

At the Kimball conservatories, Rochester, Colin Ogston has a great display of hybrid cypripediums, for some of which big figures are being offered by the British orchidists.

J. B. Keller's Sons, of Rochester, had a big run on the crimson azalea, which can be brought in at Christmas and is a good seller. Cyclamen and primulas in 6-inch and 7-inch pots sold well.

The Lake View Rose Gardens, at Jamestown, N. Y., had a heavy call during the holidays and are adding more glass to this mammoth plant.

F. A. Dorman, of Jamestown, says his business is getting beyond his capacity and contemplates making some change.

E. Worden intended making some change in his place before the rush, but was prevented by the illness of his partner who, we are pleased to report, has almost fully recovered.

One of the finest sights seen in early summer is a bed of tuberous rooted begonias which do splendidly in this high altitude.

There will be an unusually large amount of planting done this season along Lake Chautauqua, which is becoming a favorite resort with wealthy Pittsburghers.

Thomas Mansfield, of Lockport, says the Dietsch houses recently built are the best investment he ever made. He had a heavy crop of carnations for the holidays.

Gustave Bartholme, of Syracuse, will remove his plant to a nearby site, the land having become too valuable. He has the best location in the city for cemetery trade.

Harry Morris, of Syracuse, is of the opinion that poinsettias will continue to be the Christmas plant and he will work up a big stock for another season.

WANTED Ambitious Greenhouse Employees to become their own bosses.

Start in your shirtsleeves. You earn more money than you receive. Very true, but you could not expect to get ALL you earn. You are not working for yourself, you know. You would work harder and better if you had a place of your own, you say. Very well, we will teach you how to become a Carnation Specialist. We will make you realize the importance of looking after the little things; show you how to build your own first greenhouse; help you to brush up your stored-away knowledge, or graft fresh knowledge into you. We will start you on the way to an independent future, and it won't cost you very much. If you do not wish to work for others all your life, write today, enclosing a 2c stamp for particulars. The Florists' Correspondence School, P. O. Box 426, Missoula, Montana.

SITUATION WANTED

As foreman or manager on up-to-date commercial or private place, by first-class florist, designer, landscape gardener and nurseryman. 29 years old. 16 years' practical experience in all branches of gardening in Germany, England, France, Austria and this country. Best of references. A good salary expected. Please state particulars in first letter.

DISSOLUTION NOTICE

ONARGA, ILLINOIS, Dec. 31, 1906.

The partnership agreement heretofore existing between L. J. Risser and Ludvig Mosbaek, under the firm name of Ludvig Mosbaek, is hereby dissolved by mutual consent. All debts owing to the firm of Ludvig Mosbaek and all debts owing by the firm have been assumed by the new business, which will be continued under the name of the Mosbaek Greenhouse Company of Onarga, the Iroquois Canning Company, of which Mr. L. J. Risser is President, succeeding to the business.

L. J. RISSER.
LUDVIG MOSBAEK.

FOR SALE.

A greenhouse business with established trade, mostly wholesale, situated near Albany, N. Y. Contains 9000 ft. glass (3000 ft. now in course of erection) with good stock of mums, sweet peas, smilax, lilies, etc. Excellent shipping facilities, and in hands of one who knows his business will prove a gilt-edge investment.

Entire plant built within last three years and in very best condition now. Steam heat, city water, electric lights and all improvements; 100-ton capacity coal house with season's supply on hand.

Examine for yourself and be convinced there is no fake in this proposition, for it is first-class and will be sold at a price and on terms which will be satisfactory. The owner in carrying out other plans cannot successfully continue the florists' business. Address

Troy, Ohio.—C. W. Skinner is at Leesburg, Fla., installing mechanical watering systems for the truckers.

Henry Phillip, at Rogers Park, Chicago, has grown vegetables, roses, carnations, and again vegetables. He says that the returns from a given area are about the same whatever the crop, if it is successful, but that the advantage in growing vegetables lies in the fact that if a crop starts to go wrong it may be thrown out and a new one started with the loss of but a few weeks, whereas, with roses or carnations, a poor crop means a poor year. He says the Rogers Park growers expect lettuce to do no more than pay expenses and look to a spring crop of cucumbers for most if not all their season's profit.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

Chicago, Jan. 22.—Cucumbers, $1 to $2 doz.; leaf lettuce, 25c to 40c case; radishes, 25c to 45c dozen bunches; spinach, 50c to 65c box; tomatoes, 25c to 35c lb.; mushrooms, 55c lb.

Boston, Jan. 21.—Cucumbers, $3 to $4 box; tomatoes, 30c to 35c lb.; parsley, $1 to $1.25 box; lettuce, 50c to 75c doz.; romaine, 75c to $1 doz; mushrooms, 50c to 60c lb.; radishes, $1.50 to $1.75 box; mint, 75c doz. bunches.

New York, Jan. 21.—Cucumbers continue scarce and firm. Mushrooms are in rather light supply and prices close steady. Many of today's receipts reached the stores very late in the morning, which caused considerable inconvenience. Cucumbers, 75c to $1.75 doz.; culls, $2 to $2.50 box; lettuce, 25c to $1.25 doz.; mushrooms, white, 25c to 75c lb.; brown, 25c to 60c lb.; mint, 50c to $1 doz. bunches; radishes, 3c to 4c bunch; parsley, 15c doz. bunches; rhubarb, 70c to 75c large bunch; tomatoes, 10c to 30c lb.

FORCING ASPARAGUS.

I would like to know how old asparagus roots should be to be strong enough to pay for forcing; also something of the treatment under glass. J. W.

It is necessary to have good, strong roots, two years old, to insure profitable results in forcing. If they are homegrown, all the better, as then they can be lifted and placed in the forcing quarters without danger of the roots suffering from dryness, from which they are sure to suffer more or less when shipped for a distance. Quite a little of the soil can be left on the roots when lifted in the home grounds, but enough should be shaken off to allow of the crowns being set well together to economize space.

Asparagus, being one of the earliest outdoor vegetables, is easily started into growth. The most suitable forcing quarters for it we have tried, is a brick pit heated by hot water, the pipes running arount the pit about two feet from the bottom. Previous to putting in the roots we place about a foot of heating material, such as stable litter and leaves, in the bottom of the pit, firming it well down. Over this is placed about three inches of sand, on which the asparagus roots are set, closely together. These again are covered with sand to a depth of six inches. The heat generated quickly starts the plants into growth and, about three weeks from the time they are put in, we begin to see the points appearing above the sand.

Cutting requires to be attended to every morning, the shoots being cut when about two inches over the sand. It is necessary to scrape some of the sand away to get the shoots cut well down, but care must be exercised in the operation or the shoots that are under way may be broken or damaged. No novice should be put to do the cutting. It will pay to have some man do it who can be depended on to do it carefully.

Asparagus can be forced in a greenhouse where a temperature of 55 degrees can be maintained. We have often seen it forced under the benches, but consider that it cannot be given justice there. It is better to devote a bench to it. If the bench is not deep enough to allow of enough covering to sufficiently blanch the shoots the bed could be shaded; not necessarily heavily, but just enough to draw the growths up and keep them blanched without weakening them.

The sand, either in pits or benches, must receive an occasional watering to prevent drying out; but a great deal of water is not necessary. The sand can be counted on to hold the moisture quite well.

Plants like asparagus, that respond quickly to forcing treatment, cannot be counted on to derive much nourishment either from the material they are planted in, or from the water applied to them. So the crop must depend on the properties already stored up in the roots. The securing of strong, vigorous roots, therefore, is the principal necessity. With these, and a fairly good means of forcing, there should not be any trouble in making a success. W. S. CROYDON.

LETTUCE OR CARNATIONS.

There is a little information I wish concerning the growing of carnations and lettuce. I have five greenhouses. Two are 10x45 each, one 10x59 and two are 17x59 each, all short-roofed plan. The houses 10x45 were built in 1905 and last fall I added the other three. Both seasons I have grown my carnations in the two houses 10x45 and they have been a complete success. But I did not get my last three houses in condition to put in more carnations and have now just finished setting them with lettuce and have the prespects of a good crop. But I would much rather grow the one crop because it saves trouble and my time is pretty well taken up with other work. Would the carnations bring me more money with less trouble than lettuce, for the season coming? I have plenty of field room for carnations. Yet I realize there is a chance for bedding plants after lettuce crop is gone. After supplying our home trade I can wholesale what surplus I have at Danville, as we make that city with wagon with winter vegetables three times every week, but I would have to look elsewhere to dispose of carnations. W. C. W.

There is no one so well qualified as yourself to form an opinion as to which crop you would better grow. You know what your carnations are and you soon will know what the lettuce will return. It all depends on the grower, the quality of the stock he produces and the market he has. There are hundreds who started as lettuce growers who now grow cut flowers, usually carnations, and there are a good many who built their houses for carnations who now have them filled with lettuce.

MINT.

Mint is one of the few possible products of the vegetable house that does not seem to be grown as plentifully as the demand would warrant. There seems to be always a ready sale for it at a remunerative price. It is a plant of the easiest culture, only, the roots being of a rambling, spready nature; it is hard to lift, unless plants are especially prepared for forcing purposes.

In private establishments, where the gardener has to keep up a supply, plants are usually grown in pots all summer for the purpose of planting in the benches in autumn or early winter. Offsets are taken from the outdoor plants in spring; enough of them are put in a 5-inch pot to insure the pot being well filled by fall. The pots are plunged in ashes or some such material to prevent too frequent drying out and are cared for all summer. Other than watering and an occasional weeding, they do not require a great deal of attention. The pots are usually allowed to stand until they have had a few light frosts, when they seem to force more easily.

This potting business entails quite a little trouble, but the pots keep the plants compact and make the planting a good deal easier than if the plants have to be lifted from the open ground. Though, if young plants or offsets are planted in spring, far enough apart so that they won't run into one another, they can be lifted and planted in the benches without much injury, if the work is carefully done and can be relied on to give good results.

The most convenient method we have tried of forcing mint, is in pits. The plants are set in the pits in spring and allowed to grow there with the sashes off all summer, requiring but a small amount of attention. About the beginning of November the sashes are put on and heat turned into the pipes, with which the pits are supplied, at a night temperature of 45 degrees.

We are usually able to pick mint for Christmas and can rely on a supply from those pits all the winter through. At a higher temperature red spider is apt to put in an appearance and cause trouble, but at the temperature here given there is little danger of it. Aphis will appear more or less and an occasional smoking will be necessary to keep it in check. W. S. CROYDON.

DANVILLE, N. Y.—F. M. Smith has four greenhouses and 4,000 feet of hotbeds. He has added twenty acres to his truck garden, making forty-three acres in all.

CHAMPAIGN, ILL.—J. E. Yeats, of the East Side Floral Co., left January 14 to join a party of hunters at Springfield. The hunting grounds will be in Oklahoma and Texas.

CHOICE VEGETABLE SEEDS For Forcing

IT is reported from Newark, Ohio, that George L. Miller, long in the florists' business there, has gone to Boston to take charge of the retail flower seed department of the W. W. Rawson Co.

THE seedsmen who have a large trade among market gardeners are the ones who are having uphill work just now. The low priced catalogue is used by the gardener as a standard for price, although he still insists upon the same choice quality he has received heretofore.

SOME of the more recent recruits to the ranks of vine seed growers are willing to learn what a merchantable sample is, and there are others who are not.

NO one well acquainted with the California seed growers has any serious belief that the advance in contract prices is inspired by anything other than business necessity.

O. D. WILHITE, of Los Angeles, Cal., is reported to have a wonderful new muskmelon. He says it was raised by a man named Stewart, at Riverside, and this is what a Los Angeles paper, in a two-column write-up, says of the parentage: "He took a selected pineapple melon vine, and covered its blossoms with the pollen from the eastern pomegranate and the Muscat grape." The paper admits that this method was peculiar.

is a distinct improvement over the first retail catalogue. Pictures of the firm's store before and after the fire and at present are interesting.

GEORGE S. GREEN, of the Illinois Seed Co., Chicago, has returned from a two weeks' trip east.

THE January movement of onion sets has begun and the shortage of refrigerator cars is working a hardship upon the shippers.

THE Wm. Rennie Co., Toronto, has opened a branch store at Montreal in charge of J. Purvis, in addition to its branches at Winnipeg and Vancouver.

A NOTE on Virginian narcissi as forced for the Chicago cut flower market, to be found on another page of this issue, will interest seedsmen who handle bulbs.

THE onion set contractor is beginning to call for specifications. He wants to know how low the seed can be supplied for and how high the product will be taken at.

THE fact that much of the onion seed received this year is of low vitality leads some of the trade to think it may have been blended with the surplus of several years ago.

IT is remarkable how low some seedsman can get the prices, and yet claim to handle nothing but the choicest article. It is hardly possible that a good article can be delivered at half price.

A NOTICEABLE feature in the catalogues this year is the drop in the price of Longfellow beans. Heretofore this has been a high priced variety and, owing to its merit, has been in strong demand.

LONG credits have for so many years been one of the features of the wholesale seed trade that the proposal of growers to sell on terms of cash in sixty days is causing more agitation than are the advances in contract prices.

L. L. MAY & Co., St. Paul, are busy mailing 300,000 catalogues. Orders have commenced to come in large numbers. A number of orders were received last week from Alaska points. A number of carload lots have already been forwarded to Chicago, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Fort Worth, St. Louis and San Francisco for distribution.

THE advertising of seeds and plants in the general magazines is less this year than usual, and at the same time the trade is using more space than ever in the recently developed gardening papers. The agricultural papers are getting about their usual run of seed business. It looks as though special advertising to specially interested people is what pays.

CUT OUT THE SEEDS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 22.—The house committee on agriculture today decided to omit the paragraph providing for the free distribution of seeds, from the agricultural appropriation bill when it is reported to Congress. This is the same action taken a year ago, when the paragraph was inserted by amendment on the floor.

A CASE FOR McVAY.

The following interesting note is from the editorial column of the Ledger of Birmingham, Ala.: "The distribution of seed by congressmen has been highly useful, and it will be continued. The effort to stop this distribution comes from interested men. Farmers want the little packages of seed from other states for they often find a seed suitable to their soil. That is what is intended. It is the best way yet invented to distribute useful seed to the different soils." It is up to Brother McVay to show this benighted gentleman the light.

FIVE NEW VARIETIES FOR 1907

Vick's Sunset. Companion to Daybreak and Purity; in color a delicate pink shading to a deep rich pink in center. Profuse bloomer. Price per packet, 25c; 2 packets, 40c.

Vick's Upright. Long, graceful stems branch out at the ground and grow directly upward. Flowers are symmetrical, double and full to the center. Splendid for cutting. Especially valuable for shipping. Price per packet, 25c; 2 packets, 40c.

Vick's Royal Purple. An offshoot from the Branching. Unlike its parent, it sends out stems close to the ground. A medium early variety but lasting until late in fall. Nearly every stem produces specimen flowers. Price per packet, 20c; 2 packets, 35c.

Vick's Branching Rosy Carmine. A new color in the Branching class. Leading florists pronounce it a shade which will be popular with the trade. Price per packet, 25c; 2 packets, 40c.

Vick's Cardinal. The best bedding Aster ever introduced. A good one for cutting. With its profusion of flowers and brilliant coloring it makes a handsome showing. Price per packet, 25c; 2 packets, 40c.

SEEDSMEN TAKE NEW TACK.

It appears that the fight on free seeds has assumed a new angle, the trade instigators of the war on the general distribution of common garden seeds having adopted the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture that the appropriation be continued but applied to its original purpose, the procuring and distribution of new and rare varieties.

Speaking of the recent meeting of seedsmen at Washington, Albert McCullough, of Cincinnati, said to the REVIEW:

"A committee of seedsmen had a hearing before the senate committee on agriculture to enter our protest, not alone as seedsmen, but as business men and tax-payers against the free distribution of seeds by congressmen through the Department of Agriculture as now existing. Our protests were purely against the distribution of the common or ordinary sorts as now being made, and we at the same time recommended the continuance of the appropriation, if anything the sum to be increased for the benefit of the Department of Agriculture in introducing and disseminating new and rare varieties, and for educational purposes, and for establishing and maintaining experimental stations, and we have every reason to believe that the senate committee will report favorably thereon, especially so since the Department of Agriculture itself practically asks and recommends the same thing that the trade is seeking.

"This same matter has been agitated more or less before the congressional committees for many years, but it has only been within the last year or so that the public at large has taken much if any interest in it. Seemingly it has been considered more a fight of the seedsmen on the ground that they were attempting to do away with the competition of the government, but now that the granges and the agricultural organizations and societies throughout the entire United States have taken it up and placed it upon its proper and broader plane, we are in a position to place the matter before our congressmen so that

NOTES FROM HOLLAND.

From the standpoint of bulb growers the year 1906 was a very favorable one, notwithstanding the grave fact that prices realized on hyacinths, what may be said to be the main and standard crop of the district, have been below the cost of production. However, the prospects are much brighter than they were last year at this time, and considering that the end of the shipping season of this year found a shortage all around of hyacinths, and the dealers unable to fill all the orders in hand, it indicates that prices even under normal conditions will be higher the coming season. Should we, however, have to face an insufficient crop to meet the usual demand there is no telling what prices may come to.

Crocuses are no doubt in the same or perhaps even a more favorable condition, as stocks have been generally much reduced, and although the already prevailing higher prices may interfere somewhat with the sales, it could not possibly make up for the short supply in the market.

In tulips the season has been an unusual one, for not only did the crop suffer from the effects of the cold weather and disease, but the local demand for all the best trade sorts, and the enormous demand from America, especially in red and scarlet tulips, caused the prices on some sorts to go up sharply. In consequence the export trade to England suffered because late orders could not be filled, but the advantage was that it enabled dealers in England who had a supply on hand to sell them at good prices, and even to sell all they had in the way of tulips. No doubt such a state of affairs must also have a favorable effect on the producer on this side, and, taking it all around, there is every prospect of a satisfactory season in the approaching year.

At the end of December we are under twelve inches of snow, and no frost could do any harm to any of our bulb crops under such a cover. Notwithstanding that it has put a stop to all outside work, the growers are ready to welcome a fortnight of sharp frost, be it only to put a stop and kill some of the overabundant supply of vermin that has increased wonderfully during the last two summerlike winters, and has been trying to live on bulbs whenever nothing else more suitable to their taste could be found.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

Essex, Conn.—Fannie M. Pratt has given up her business and is now known as Mrs. Racket.

Rhinebeck, N. Y.—J. M. Loen says the production of violets is this year not over fifty per cent of what might reasonably be expected.

EUROPEAN SEED NOTES.

Large English firms in the horticultural trade have of late years shown a considerable and increasing tendency to form themselves into limited liability companies. This may or not be the result of some years of bad trade, but it is noticeable that these firms that form themselves into limited companies usually increase their business by so doing and also, which is of more consequence, increase their profit and generally put their business on a sound financial basis. The latest to join the ranks of limited companies in the horticultural trade are Samuel Finney & Co., with £12,000 capital. This is an old established and well known high class seed business carried on at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

EUROPEAN SEED NOTES.

Large English firms in the horticultural trade have of late years shown a considerable and increasing tendency to form themselves into limited liability companies. This may or not be the result of some years of bad trade, but it is noticeable that these firms that form themselves into limited companies usually increase their business by so doing and also, which is of more consequence, increase their profit and generally put their business on a sound financial basis. The latest to join the ranks of limited companies in the horticultural trade are Samuel Finney & Co., with £12,000 capital. This is an old established and well known high class seed business carried on at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The Prevention of Corruption Act is causing considerable stir and excitement in the nursery and seed trade in England. The act makes it a criminal offense, with a maximum penalty of two years' imprisonment and a fine of £500, to offer any person remuneration in the shape of either money, goods or favor for doing or not doing any act in relation to his principal's business. In the horticultural trades the act prevents the giving of commissions to gardeners, which of late years has become a considerable tax on those firms doing a large private trade. A meeting of the trade has been held in London and it was decided to give a uniform five per cent discount, the discount to be openly stated on each invoice and in the catalogues. The principal seed firms of the country were represented at the meeting and it was particularly asked that all foreign firms, including American, would please agree to the same. It is very doubtful if the decision will serve any useful purpose and it is the opinion of many that it would have been better if no discount whatever had been agreed to. The foreign trade is said to be flooding England with circulars offering a larger discount and for a time at least a considerable amount of increased retail trade will go abroad.

Many of the largest retail seed houses have already published and posted their seed catalogue and it is reported the spring order season is opening with a very satisfactory increase of business. It is anticipated that somewhere near a record year will be established in the retail trade.

The demand for sweet pea seed is enormous and quite beyond expectations, but unfortunately this only applies to the recent introductions and the newest and best varieties, such as are in short supply.

The endeavors of those firms engaged in the clover seed business to induce the English growers holding heavy stocks of red clover to thresh and market the seed at the earliest possible moment have met with great success and English red clover is coming on the markets in considerable quantities. Considering the supplies, very satisfactory prices are being realized.

Contrary to some expectations, the English-grown seed pea trade is holding up, and considering the quantities on offer, good and remunerative prices are obtained. The continental and foreign buyers generally are reported as being heavily in evidence. B. J.

RHINEBECK, N. Y.—Two of the local violet growers are "lawing it" because one gave the other a check for more money than he had in the bank.

IOWA FALLS, IA.—J. P. Murphy, who has been engaged in the greenhouse business at New Hampton, has sold out there and has purchased the business owned by Miss Jennie Smuck. Mr. Murphy has already moved his family to this place and will take immediate possession.

BUENA, N. J.—Lacroix & Raimbault claim to be the largest forcers of lilac for the Philadelphia and New York markets. They grow it in large quantity and supply some of the leading retail florists in each city, reporting a good demand. Although there is some complaint of poor stock, the quality of their output is excellent.

BLUE HYDRANGEAS.

According to the Moniteur du Jardinier the following method is employed in some of the large German horticultural establishments to produce blue Hydrangea Hortensia. The process begins with growing young plants in trenches in the open air in summer, the trenches being filled in with ferruginous loam, to which iron filings and alum are added. In autumn the plants are potted in a similar compost and kept in a cool house until the time comes for them to be transferred to heated pits, where they are to be forced. They are then watered with a weak solution of alum, which is strengthened as the trusses develop. Treated thus most of the plants are clear and bright in coloring of the flowers.

DEKALB, ILL.

Peter Christianson, of this city, is a well-known contractor and builder and also a dealer in all sorts of building and heating materials. He has formed a partnership with L. F. Probst to enter into business as horticultural architects and builders. The firm name is Probst & Christianson. Mr. Probst is an experienced horticultural architect, having been connected with the J. C. Moninger Co., Chicago, for a number of years. The firm will make a specialty of iron construction and will be equipped to build anything in the greenhouse line, from the ordinary commercial structure to the largest of public conservatories. A specialty also will be made of tufa construction. Tufa is a stonelike material manufactured by the American Tufa Incrustation Co., of Sandusky, Ohio. It is largely used for construction of ornamental horticultural structures, for fountains, rockeries, etc., and Probst & Christianson are the company's agents for all territory west of Detroit. Mr. Probst states that they have knowledge of a large amount of such work as they are equipped to handle planned for construction in the middle west in the approaching season. They already have booked several contracts and if they are successful in securing only a moderate share of the work now in sight the organizing of the new firm will be fully justified.

Araucarias Our Specialty

OUR LITTLE PETS

From Aschmann, in Philadelphia, we bought
An Araucaria, a pet for our little girl
Now we have two pets, the pride of our thought:
The little girl so sweet, a head full of curls,
And the Araucaria with its everlasting green—
A more joyful home you never have seen.

Araucaria compacta robusta and glauca is a perfect marvel of Nature, a wonder of Nature; the brush of an artist cannot paint it any better. Price—6 to 7-in. pots, 4 to 6 years old, 4 to 6 tiers, 25 to 30 inches high and wide, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00 to $2.50 each. Specimen Glauca, 5 years old, 7-in. pots, 6 to 7 tiers, 30 to 35 inches high and wide, $2.00, $2.50 to $3.00 each; 6-in. pots, 3 to 5 tiers, 3 years old, 15 to 25 inches high, $1.00 to $1.25 each.

Araucaria Excelsa. 6-in. pots, 5 to 7 tiers, 4 years old, 25 to 30 inches high, $1.00 to $1.50 each.

Kentia Forsteriana

are not scarce with us. We can meet all wants.

Kentia Forsteriana, 7-in. pots, made-up, one large size plant about 45 to 48 inches high in the center and three smaller sizes, 25 to 30 inches high around it, which gives them a good appearance, $2.00 to $2.50 each; 6-in. pots, single plants, 36 to 45 inches high, 5 to 6 good leaves, 4 years old, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 each; 6-in pots, 32 to 36 inches high, 5 to 6 good leaves, 4 years old, $1.00 each; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 4 years old, 30 inches high, 5 good leaves, 75c each.

Dracaena Bruanti (imported), 30 inches high, 6-inch pots, 50c; $5.00 per dozen. Full of golden waxy foliage from top to bottom, the best Dracaena known for house decoration; stands any amount of heat and dust; a great favorite all over Europe; easy to keep.

FERNS—All raised in pots and not on bench, as follows:

Nephrolepis Barrowsii, 7-in. pots as big as a bushel basket, 75c to $1.00 each; 6-in. pots, large, ready for 7-in., 50c; 5½-in., 40c; 5-in., 35c; 4-in., 25c.

Boston Ferns, 7-in., very bushy, only 75c; 6-in., 50c or $5.00 per dozen; 5-in., 30c to 35c; 4-in., 20c.

Nephrolepis Scottii, 8-in., as big as a wash-tub, worth $2.00, now $1.25; 7-in., as big as a bushel basket, worth $1.25, now 75c; 6-in., 50c; 5½-in., 40c; 4-in., 20c.

Holly Ferns, 5c.

Azaleas in bud and bloom—Simon Mardner (pink), Deutsche Perle (double white), Vervaeneana (double rose, variegated), 75c, $1.00, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Cineraria Hybrida, H. F. Michell's best strain, 2¼-in. pots, $4.00 per 100; 3-in. pots, strong plants ready for a shift into 5½ or 6-in. pots, $7.00 per 100; 4-in. pots, $10.00 per 100.

Areca Sapida, 6-in., 50c each.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Prof. N. E. Hansen, of Brookings, S. D., has reached here on a trip around the world, searching for new plants for the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—The Ingleside Floral Co. has combined the store, greenhouses and nurseries at 148 W. Adams street. F. Edward Gray is the proprietor.

HOLLYWOOD, CAL.—E. C. Hamton is in the cucumber business exclusively, growing them under glass. He built a new house this season 26x180 and now has about 20,000 feet of glass. He reports that the season has been cold and unfavorable, as there has been about three times the normal amount of rain.

MCMINNVILLE, ORE.—S. H. Maris, proprietor of the Pioneer Greenhouses, has one house 20x80, one 24x80, one 16x80 and one 12x40, making a total of 7,900 feet of glass. He grows carnations, mums, commercial plants, etc., and has a stock of miscellaneous supplies. Mr. Maris reports a prosperous year and a splendid holiday trade.

SHIPMENTS of apples in the green state from the Pajaro valley, California, for the season to the end of December aggregated about 2,000 carloads. The crop of green fruit was short compared with last year, particularly in marketable Newtowns, on account of scab, while about ten times as many apples as last year were dried and canned.

EXCESSIVE MOISTURE.

The effect of the superabundance of rain in the central and northern portions of California is evident in the quietness of the trade. Hundreds of thousands of trees in the nursery rows remain undug and many others are healed in the ground. There has not been enough dry weather at any one time since our downpour began to allow the proper digging of stock, and the mud is too deep to work to any advantage. This unlooked for amount of moisture does not usually come among us, but I have noticed that every four or five years we have what is termed a wet year. This is particularly unfortunate when the season commences late, as it did this year, for it makes the selling season so short that many planters will put off their purchases for another season.

In the eastern states, where cold weather is in order until the first part of May, this makes little difference; but in California it is necessary to get the planting over by the first of March, as after that time we usually get plenty of warm weather and deciduous trees rapidly begin to leaf and then their season for handling with naked roots is over.

The dealers in fruit trees probably fare worse than those in any other branch of the trade at this time, as their season is very short and planters usually do not care to take any risks, where the involvement of a large quantity of trees and their maintenance for several years is concerned. This makes a heavy blow for the grower to bear, as the additional expense of carrying trees over for another year is one of the most expensive and unsatisfactory features to be contended with. This does not make such a difference with the ordinary lines of ornamental trees, unless for some large sizes that are rapidly getting too big for handling to advantage.

The effect on small stock that is being grown from cuttings or seed is to keep it backward and there will be a scarcity of annuals and soft wooded stock for several months to come. Sweet peas for early flowers also plainly show the results of too much moisture and subsequent plantings will have to be made in the near future. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The rain has been descending unceasingly for the last week. We have seen nothing whatever of the sun. Business is quiet in everything except funeral work and flowers are much scarcer than they were a week ago. The dark weather has had the effect of shortening supplies of all kinds and, although there is but little sale for flowers in a retail way, it keeps the dealers hustling to have a show in their windows.

The prices of carnations and roses have not been raised and we do not anticipate that they will be. The best fancy carnations cost the retailers $4 per hundred and from that price down to $2. Good roses are decidedly scarce and, unless we have a warmer spell soon, they will be almost out of market.

The greatest shortage at present seems to be in the line of green stuff of all kinds. Many of our growers of maidenhair and asparagus operate their houses entirely without the use of artificial heat and now, that we have had such a succession of cold weather, they are not cutting anything like the usual quantities and supplies are short. Smilax is in the same condition and the dealers are having some difficulty in filling orders.

Violets are plentiful and are being used in large quantities on all occasions. Narcissi are gradually coming into bloom and a couple of weeks will see them at their height.

Various Notes.

Charles Kegley, late of Des Moines, Iowa, is located at Oakland. Mr. Kegley is well pleased with California after having spent many years in the eastern states.

Clarke Bros., of Fruitvale, Cal., have a large house filled with smilax which they will keep for their Easter trade.

The florists of this section are now quieting down to the usual run after a most strenuous rush during the holiday season. Everyone could have sold twice as many flowers, but they were not to be had for love or money. They had been in the habit of depending on the south and British Columbia and these growers did not have enough for their own use. A number of customers went from place to place in hopes of getting flowers, but without success.

ATTENTION, Western Florists!

Wholesale Growers of Carnations, Roses, Violets, Paper Whites, Callas, Plumosus, Sprengeri, Smilax, Adiantum, etc.

We Want to Hear From You.

RISING & DUNSCOMB CO., Inc.
205 N. Broadway, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

fore Christmas saw a good many lines depleted and by evening there was nothing to offer except plants. Next morning, before customers were up, there was a fresh stock in from the greenhouses, the men having worked nearly all night cutting stock. This firm had a large quantity of Nonin mums, which went like hot cakes on a cold morning. Enchantress carnations seemed to be the general favorite in this section and brought $2.50 per dozen. Pans of poinsettias and Christmas peppers took best in plants.

The Harrington Co. has added thirteen houses to its plant this year and hopes to be better able to handle the trade next season.

We are now having a taste of back east winter, which is unusual for this section.

We understand that Mr. Hass is going out of the flower business and will grow vegetables.

We had a visit from Mr. Karins, of the Henry A. Dreer Co., last week. He happened around when the florist saw his stock was low and felt his pockets stick out from the week before.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Nothing out of the common has happened in the first three weeks of the new year. Trade has been a little easy-going, giving us time to recruit our forces and to do some planning for the next great rush. The cut flower supply is at a low ebb and never did we more appreciate the shipments of fine, long-stemmed stock from California than now, which, owing to the present low temperature, has arrived in a most excellent condition.

Speaking of the weather, the thermometer has registered as low as 10 degrees above zero during the last week, which is something rare for Portland. Such extreme cold has not visited us in years and we cannot appreciate it. We have had no snow in our immediate vicinity and we fear that the cutting east wind will prove disastrous to certain kinds of outdoor stock.

We were glad of the opportunity to exchange the season's greetings with James Karins, representing Henry A. Dreer. This is his third trip to the coast and he has proved to be of the right kind of material. In regard to trade along the road, Mr. Karins said it was immense, and so was the great northwest country. H. J. M.

WHITE FLY AGAIN.

Please let us know how to get rid of the white fly. It is mostly on fuchsias and pelargoniums. We have been fumigating three times a week and can't get rid of them. We are not bothered with any other kind of insect, the houses being clean. F. & S.

The fumes of tobacco have no effect on this little fly. We heard a private gardener state last week that a mixture of whale oil soap and nicotine would kill it. The holes in the body, through which the fly breathes, would be stopped up and the fly perishes. We know nothing more about the solution than what we heard our friend relate. The cyanide gas will destroy them, the formula for which has been published many times in the REVIEW. W. S.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

THERE will be another big increase in the use of phloxes this season.

THE demand for ornamental stock is increasing at a tremendous rate in the west.

LABOR is likely to be one of the scarcest items when the spring planting season comes.

THE Peterson Nursery, Chicago, makes a specialty of irises and reports a large annual increase in sales.

JACKSON & PERKINS CO., Newark, N. Y., report a wide market for Colorado blue spruce. They grow it in considerable quantity, seedlings, not grafted plants.

TEXAS nurserymen and fruit growers are alarmed because the unseasonably warm weather has started the buds at a date after which severe cold usually is experienced.

IT is becoming a common practice for nurserymen to guarantee the life for one year of stock they plant for customers and to disclaim responsibility for stock planted by others. The guarantee necessitates occasional inspection.

IT will be easily possible for most nurserymen to give customers better stock by the simple means of more careful digging, handling and packing. Too little attention is paid to the care of trees while out of the ground.

THE trouble with standard grades for stock lies in defining with sufficient clearness and brevity just what a good tree or plant should be. Ideas differ and what one man would consider good might be wholly unacceptable to another.

RUSSIAN MULBERRY HEDGE.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph taken on Sheridan road, on the north side of Chicago, where there is a clean sweep to Lake Michigan, not over 200 feet away. Anything that will stand the winters there may be classed as reliably hardy anywhere short of the arctic regions.

But the point of interest in the picture is the excellent hedge of Russian mulberry. This is twelve years old and in perfect condition. This hedge was planted by the Peterson Nursery, and B. E. Gage, of that institution, says they have a number of such in good condition planted where only an absolutely hardy plant will meet the requirements. He says the one operation necessary to get a good hedge of Russian mulberry is to cut it back hard when planted, and keep it down by successive hard prunings until it grows from the bottom; it must not be permitted to grow tall before an attempt is made to get bottom growth. It will not do well in shade.

CATALPA SEEDS.

A large number of catalpa seedlings are being grown for timber plantations and, as speciosa is considered the best variety, it is desirable that planters should be able to distinguish this from other sorts. By examining the seeds it will be observed that the seeds of speciosa are much larger in every way than in the other sorts, and also that the hairy ends of the wings are spread out, fan-shaped, while those of bignonioides are drawn to a point like a waxed mustache.

J. C. Teas' Japanese hybrid, which is a cross between speciosa and Kæmpferi, has seeds much smaller than the two varieties named above, but produces a tree of great vigor and probably possesses merit as a timber tree. Owing to its comparatively recent introduction, its value in this region has not yet been determined. The seeds of Kæmpferi are much smaller than either of the others and the tree is not as rapid in growth as either speciosa or Teas' Japanese hybrid; though I know of one grove of about 4,000 trees of this variety, planted twenty-two years ago, that now contains many trees about ten inches in diameter, from which fence-posts have been cut the last few years. This grove is highly valued by the owner.

Catalpa bignonioides, although the earliest introduced into cultivation, is believed to be least valuable of any, on account of its crooked, irregular habit, as well as slow growth. Mature trees of speciosa and bignonioides may be distinguished by the outer barks. Speciosa has a very rough, ribbed outer bark much like black walnut, while bignonioides has a smoother bark that scales off, something like sycamore. Catalpa bignonioides is native on the south Atlantic coast, while speciosa is found native only in the Mississippi valley from southern Indiana westward into Missouri and Arkansas.

Catalpa seeds vegetate nearly as quickly as corn. The young plants are nearly as tender to frost as young tomato plants; hence the seeds should not be sown until danger from frost is past. We usually sow toward the latter part of May or first part of June, in finely pulverized, rich, light soil. If the seeds are not planted too thickly plants will attain two to three feet the first year, ready for the timber plantation the following spring. A pound of Catalpa speciosa contains about 20,000 seeds and a pound of Kæmpferi about 50,000 to 60,000 seeds. E. Y. TEAS.

PENNSYLVANIA NURSERYMEN.

The annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Nurserymen's Association was held at Harrisburg, January 17 and 18, for the discussion of business conditions and mutual interests. On the evening of the second day J. H. McFarland entertained with a dinner and an illustrated lecture on civic improvement. Those present were: William H. Moon, Morrisville; Thomas B. Meehan, Philadelphia; Earl Peters, Mt. Holly; David S. Herr, Mountville; S. Maurice Jones, West Grove; Thomas Rakestraw, Kennett Square; W. E. Grove, York Springs; James Krewson, Cheltenham; George Achelis, West Chester; S. C. Moon, Morrisville; Edwin W. Thomas and A. W. Root, Manheim.

THE Agricultural Experiment Station at the University of Arizona has issued a bulletin, in which it urges the planting of trees and shrubs suitable to climatic conditions on the approaching Arbor day.

IT is reported that seedling pecan trees have been delivered that had been cut and permitted to sprout so as to look as if they were budded. F. H. Burdette, of the Louisiana Experiment Station, says he has seen it, but no nurseryman can be found who knows anything of it.

3 NEW CANNAS

WILLIAM SAUNDERS

The flowers are large, of splendid form, and are borne very freely in immense clusters. The color is a deep rich shining scarlet slightly dappled with crimson. Foliage is a rich bronze. Height, 3½ to 4 feet. We believe that Wm. Saunders is decidedly the most perfect Canna of this type that has been introduced. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

OTTAWA

Is a strong grower, very robust and 5 to 6 feet high. The flowers are large and beautifully formed, color is carmine with tints of old rose and deep coral, add to this the silken sheen and you can imagine the effect a few plants will produce.

NOTE—We had this Canna on trial among the Canadian experimental stations last summer and this is the official report of their expert: "Quite distinct and one of the most beautiful shades of color I ever saw in Cannas. Of 70 massed in one bed during the past season, this was the most floriferous in the collection, coming into bloom early and continuing until cut down by frost, as many as 18 expanded heads of blooms being counted at one time on a plant, and not a poor one among them, all being of immense size." 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

NEW YORK

Has the Orchid type of flower. They have much more substance than the flowers of the other varieties of this class, and will stand the hot sunshine as well as the toughest varieties of cannas. The color is a solid rich scarlet covered with a beautiful glowing sheen. The flowers are large and contrast beautifully with the dark bronze foliage. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

NEW ORLEANS.

Current Comment.

The evening of January 19 a large number of the New Orleans florists had two meetings to attend. The first was of the New Orleans Horticultural Society. The names of the committee on exhibits for the next chrysanthemum show were given by President Otto Abele. They are: Chairman, E. Baker; C. W. Eichling, J. A. Newsham, P. Abele, P. Chopin, Charles Ebele, R. Lockerbie, C. Ory and H. Sherman. The finance committee reported a balance on hand of $687.25. P. Chopin, chairman of the committee on revision of by-laws, presented some amendments which were held over for acceptance until the next meeting.

The second meeting was concerning the Society of Southern Florists, of which the first annual convention will take place in New Orleans February 14 to 16. A few answers have been received already in response to the circulars which have been sent to the trade and everything points to a fair attendance and a good start. The program of the three days' meetings is not complete enough to publish; but as for the papers which will be read, we are able to state already that F. P. Davis, of Mobile, Ala., will present a paper on "Roses under Glass in the South;" W. B. Paterson, of Montgomery, Ala., "Carnations in the South;" C. W. Eichling, New Orleans, "Packing and Express Rate;" Joseph Newsham, New Orleans, "Best Orchids for Cut Flowers;" R. Lockerbie, "Roses."

The New Orleans Horticultural Society voted an appropriate sum to help the Society of Southern Florists to receive its guests in good style and Chairman Lockerbie put the arrangement of this part of the reception in the hands of James Newsham, Charles Ebele and P. Chopin.

We have so far had a mild winter. No firing in the greenhouse has been done for several weeks. Grass and plants are growing springlike. Still, as long as February is not past business will not be much.

C. R. Panter is adding a new greenhouse to his place.

Peter Kaul is well stocked with a quantity of market plants in good condition. He has a bench of Adiantum cuneatum in large size pots which are nothing less than perfect. M. M. L.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

First-class Certificate, Madison and Indianapolis

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. No discount.

Price, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

We wish to ANNOUNCE TO THE TRADE that we have withdrawn our Crimson Carnation

from the market, at least for this season, and perhaps permanently. During the last few weeks of dark weather it has shown an inclination to contract a disease which if allowed to get any headway would speedily ruin it for commercial growing. The strain of dissemination, and subjection to changed methods of culture would undoubtedly cause it to go to pieces right away, and knowing the circumstances, it would be unjust to the variety and the trade to let it go out. We will continue to grow it as our main crimson, and if it throws off the disease entirely we may let it go out later, but not until we feel assured that it will trot, and be a credit to us. While we regret this very much, we are grateful that it showed this weakness before we had begun sending out the stock.

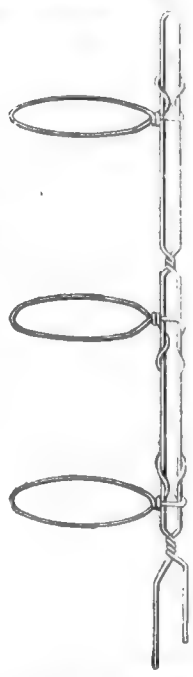
THE HEIM CARNATION SUPPORT

"THE FINEST THING OUT"



We have sold a great many without advertising but now we are prepared to fill orders by the million.

This Carnation Support is perfect in every point. The two twists make it so rigid that the most severe spraying does not effect the position of the support or plant.

The rings are movable up and down to allow adjustment to the growth of the plants. The base is opposite to the upright, thus allowing perfect cultivation between the plants. Made of Galvanized Wire.

We also wish to call attention to the double ring support in cut by which two plants can be supported by one stake, thus saving time and labor, which means money to the Florist.

Galvanized Steel Wire Rose Stakes in all sizes. Steel Wire Clips for Roses and Chrysanthemums are the neatest and most up-to-date articles on the market.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The weather conditions the last week have been the worst possible to conceive. The mercury stood at 70 degrees Saturday and Monday it was down to 10 degrees. During the week we have had snow, hail, rain, one balmy spring day and wound up with a wind storm which lasted for twenty-four hours and has done considerable damage.

Flowers have continued scarce and prices remain high for good stock. There are quite a lot of poor carnations, short tulips and Paper Whites which do not bring much, but the man with good stock does not need to hunt buyers.

Among the retailers there is not much excitement, business corresponding with former years. Quite a number of decorations last week kept some of them busy.

Various Notes.

The Pittsburg Rose & Carnation Co. lost 100 lights of glass in the wind storm of Sunday.

The delegation from Pittsburg to the Toronto carnation convention spent the evening at the Florists' Club smoker and left on the 11 p. m. train Tuesday.

The end of one of Randolph & McClements' big carnation houses, on the Siebert place, blew in Sunday. They got it boarded up quickly and the loss will not be heavy.

The employees of the wholesale cut flower houses are arranging for a reception and dance. The committee in charge are Walter Carney, George Marshall and Ed McCollum. The boys have arranged for a good hall and one of the best orchestras. A good time is assured to all who attend.

A. M. Murdoch is confined to his home with an attack of grip.

W. H. Carney, of J. B. Murdoch & Co., expresses excellent satisfaction with the business thus far in 1907. The firm is handling quantities of fancy American Beauties and the newer varieties of carnations. HOO-HOO.

NAPERVILLE, ILL.—Jacob Rohr & Son have gone out of business.

HOW TO PACK MUMS.

A correspondent in St. Kitt's writes to the Agricultural News (Barbadoes, West Indies) as follows: Young plants can be obtained from growers in England or America about August. The growers usually pack them in the same way as for transport in temperate regions. This gives very bad results, all the leaves and the young stems arriving in a rotten and mouldy condition. The growers should be instructed to pack as follows: Choose young plants which have formed woody stems; cut off nearly all the leaves and prune all the soft stems; wrap a very little wet sphagnum around the roots, and envelop the whole in about five loose folds of paper, some of which may be glazed, but not waxed. Do not use any box, and a paraffined box is the worst of all. If a box must be used, trust to paper wrappings for keeping moist, and cut the box full of holes.

NEW DOUBLE PETUNIA THE QUEEN

The new Petunia THE QUEEN has been grown by us for the past five years. It is a wonderful bloomer, the flowers are of an enormous size and measure from four to four and one-half inches in diameter. The flowers are white, mingled with purple, very nicely fringed, making one of the handsomest plants grown. It is an early bloomer, in fact, one of the best sellers for Decoration Day. THE QUEEN, planted outdoors will continue to bloom all summer. The flowers can be used to good advantage in design work.

CINCINNATI.

The Flood.

The main topic of conversation on every side is the flood of the Ohio river. It is the worst flood we have had in over twenty years and to describe the damage done and the suffering it has caused would be next to impossible. It would appear now that the worst is over, as the water is at a standstill, and with the cold snap that has come upon us it is likely to start going down. Three florists' places are under water and considerable damage has been done. They are all located along the Mill creek valley and thus in the flooded district. They are Wolfe, Glins and Herline. Of course, the truck gardens along this valley are all under water, and the owners will suffer serious loss. Thousands of people are homeless, on account of the water making their homes unsafe, and are being cared for by the city and various charitable organizations. It is hoped now that the end is in sight and that in a few days the river will have gone down below the danger point.

In spite of all the conditions against it, the business is holding up well. Train service is irregular and shipping business is being handled at a great disadvantage. But even with this, there is a pretty good supply of blooms in the market and they are moving out at good prices.

Various Notes.

E. G. Gillett, J. A. Peterson, W. K. Partridge, R. Witterstaetter and Ed Forter left Tuesday for the carnation convention at Toronto. They joined the Chicago delegation at Detroit.

John Lodder, of Hamilton, has been quite ill, but is improving.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Baltimore apparently is endeavoring to go through the weather calendar all in a single month. During January there has been a variety of weather that might represent the four seasons.

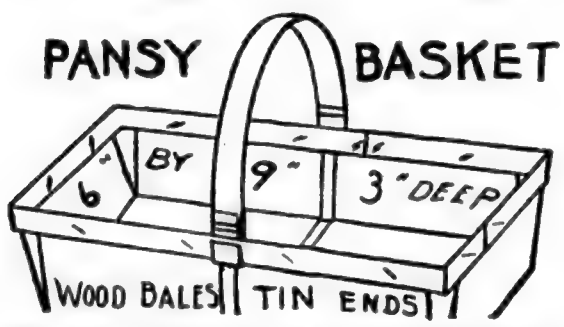
Trade last week was fair, using up all the stock. Blooms of all kinds are scarce and high in price and some of the retailers were compelled to send out of town to make up their shortage. Carnations and roses are a little steadier. The bulbous stock has been a remarkable help this year and has encouraged the growers. Greens of all kinds are in sufficient quantity to meet demands. There is some funeral work and an occasional decoration.

Various Notes.

F. C. Bauer, Govanstown, Md., is planting 1,000 Harrisii lily seedlings.

Walter Chiswick, gardener for C. H. Dickey, Roland Park, is building an addition, 18x20, to his new house, for decorative plants.

W. F. Keys, Gay and Eager streets, has bought six acres of land with some improvements on it, known as the old German property, between Belair and Harford roads, and will erect a fine greenhouse.



Fred Lepp, formerly of Pocomoke City, Md., is erecting several greenhouses at Rossville, Md.

Griffith & Turner Co. is mailing out its catalogue. January 18 nearly two tons were sent to the post-office to be distributed in and about Maryland.

The only florist who attended market regularly last week was James Glass. He was the sole reaper of what business came that way. He has never been known to miss.

The street boys were on the market Saturday offering southern single violets at a price within reach of every flower lover.

For Thrips on Carnations

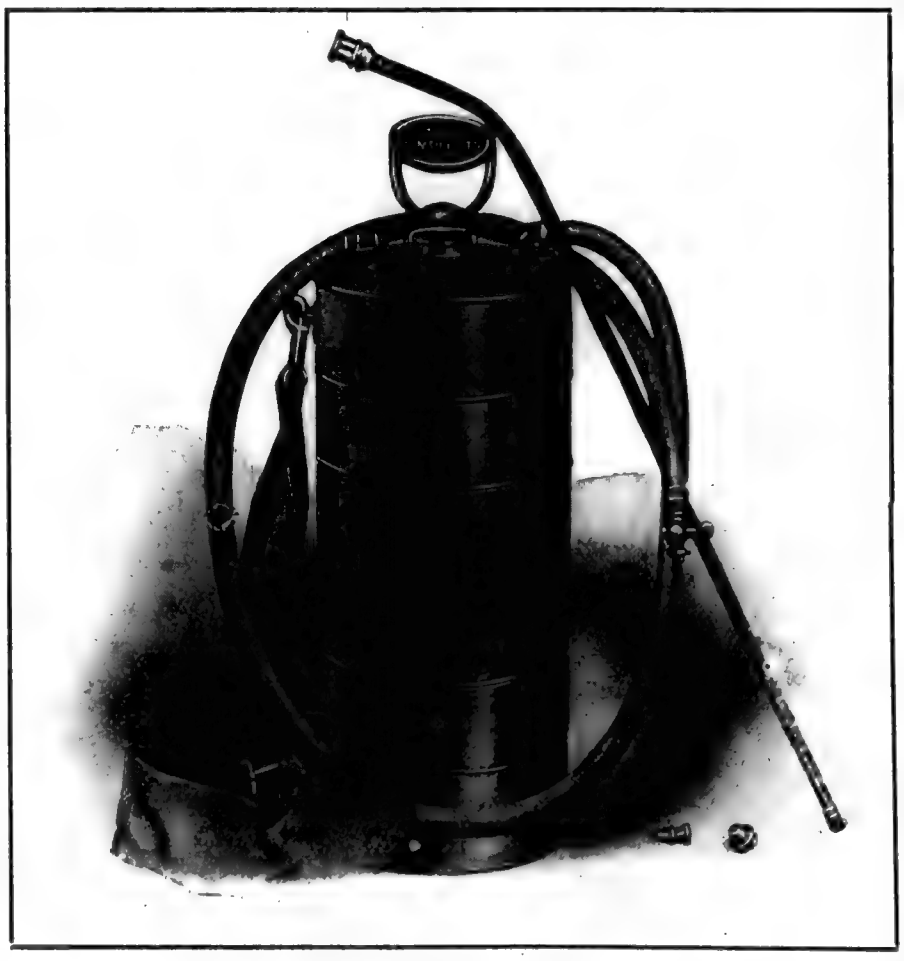
UP-TO-DATE GROWERS USE

TO=BAK=INE Liquid

MR. A. F. J. BAUR, the well-known Carnation expert, writes: "If I had a carnation house ever so badly infested by Greenfly or Thrips, I would spray with To-Bak-Ine Liquid not stronger than three teaspoonfuls to a gallon of water, and six gallons of this solution would spray a house 25 x 100 feet, thoroughly. I would rather spray with this strength every day for a few days than to make it stronger. Ordinarily one spraying in two days is enough for the first week, and thereafter, once or possibly twice each week will be sufficient. I am satisfied that spraying is most effective in destroying these pests, as well as the least harmful to the plants or blooms. In order to derive the most benefit from the use of To-Bak-Ine, it should be used regularly throughout the season, as a preventive. We begin to spray our carnations with it regularly once each week as soon as they are well-established on the beds in the houses, about September 1, (or sooner if any insects show themselves), and we find that this will keep away Aphis, Thrips, and in addition to intelligent syringing it will keep down Red Spider. The number of blooms usually lost through the ravages of these pests can be reduced to a minimum by the use of To-Bak-Ine. These blooms will easily pay for the cost of spraying and have a good balance over. It is surprising how many blooms are discarded by growers, which could have been saved by the use of this preparation; when you figure them at 3c to 5c each during midwinter it runs up into money quickly. No grower can afford to be without this preparation and it will take merely a fair trial to convince anyone of its value. When I begin on To-Bak-Ine I find it hard to stop. I feel that I could not possibly say too much in its favor, especially as a remedy for Aphis and Thrips."—Signed, A. F. J. BAUR.

TO-BAK-INE LIQUID is a 45% solution of pure nicotine (the strongest made). It has been used successfully for years by vaporizing by heat, but the latest and best method is to

SPRAY THROUGH A SIMPLEX PUMP



Also Equally Valuable in Rose Houses and for General Stock.

To-Bak-Ine Liquid in cans: ¼ pint, 60c; ½ pint, $1.10; 1 pint, $2.00; 1 quart, $3.95; 1 gallon, $15.00.
Also put up in 10, 20, and 40-gallon casks with locked faucet.

SIMPLEX SPRAY PUMP

The successful use of To-Bak-Ine Liquid as a spray depends largely on the pump and nozzle that is used in spraying. There are a great many pumps and spraying machines on the market; these have all been carefully tested in our experiments and we have found that for practical purposes the Simplex Spray Pump illustrated on this page is the most practical of any in use. These are all brass pumps, excellent for all kinds of spraying purposes, but are especially adapted for greenhouse use. Price complete, $9.00.

For Thrips on Carnations

UP-TO-DATE GROWERS USE

TO=BAK=INE Liquid

MR. A. F. J. BAUR, the well-known Carnation expert, writes: "If I had a carnation house ever so badly infested by Greenfly or Thrips, I would spray with To-Bak-Ine Liquid not stronger than three teaspoonfuls to a gallon of water, and six gallons of this solution would spray a house 25 x 100 feet, thoroughly. I would rather spray with this strength every day for a few days than to make it stronger. Ordinarily one spraying in two days is enough for the first week, and thereafter, once or possibly twice each week will be sufficient. I am satisfied that spraying is most effective in destroying these pests, as well as the least harmful to the plants or blooms. In order to derive the most benefit from the use of To-Bak-Ine, it should be used regularly throughout the season, as a preventive. We begin to spray our carnations with it regularly once each week as soon as they are well-established on the beds in the houses, about September 1, (or sooner if any insects show themselves), and we find that this will keep away Aphis, Thrips, and in addition to intelligent syringing it will keep down Red Spider. The number of blooms usually lost through the ravages of these pests can be reduced to a minimum by the use of To-Bak-Ine. These blooms will easily pay for the cost of spraying and have a good balance over. It is surprising how many blooms are discarded by growers, which could have been saved by the use of this preparation; when you figure them at 3c to 5c each during midwinter it runs up into money quickly. No grower can afford to be without this preparation and it will take merely a fair trial to convince anyone of its value. When I begin on To-Bak-Ine I find it hard to stop. I feel that I could not possibly say too much in its favor, especially as a remedy for Aphis and Thrips."—Signed, A. F. J. BAUR.

TO-BAK-INE LIQUID is a 45% solution of pure nicotine (the strongest made). It has been used successfully for years by vaporizing by heat, but the latest and best method is to

SIMPLEX SPRAY PUMP

The successful use of To-Bak-Ine Liquid as a spray depends largely on the pump and nozzle that is used in spraying. There are a great many pumps and spraying machines on the market; these have all been carefully tested in our experiments and we have found that for practical purposes the Simplex Spray Pump illustrated on this page is the most practical of any in use. These are all brass pumps, excellent for all kinds of spraying purposes, but are especially adapted for greenhouse use. Price complete, $9.00.

HARTFORD, CONN.

The regular meeting, January 11, of the Connecticut Horticultural Society, held in the county building, was the largest attended of any in several months. A. C. Sternberg, of West Hartford, the president, was in the chair and there were over fifty members present. There was a handsome exhibition of carnations, the exhibitors being F. R. Pierson Co., of Tarrytown, N. Y.; A. N. Pierson, of Cromwell; J. F. Huss, superintendent for James J. Goodwin, and Carl Peterson, manager for Miss Whiting, of West Hartford. Awards were made as follows:

F. R. Pierson—For the new carnation, Winsor, diploma; for three varieties, Helen Gould, Melody and Rose-pink Enchantress, certificates of merit.

A. N. Pierson—For unnamed seedling, diploma; for two of the best specimens coupled, Robert Craig and Rose-pink Enchantress, certificate of merit.

J. F. Huss—Exhibit of blooms of many varieties, certificate of merit.

Carl Peterson—Exhibit of different varieties, certificate of merit.

U. G. Scollay, of New York, a builder of greenhouses, gave an interesting talk about greenhouse construction and heating. Mr. Huss enlightened those present on carnation culture.

Altoona, Pa.—L. S. Peterson has one house 16x32, one 22x115 and one 30x115 under construction. He is making a specialty of cut flowers and pot plants.

Greenhouse Heating.

AMOUNT OF PIPE.

My house is 28½x100. How much pipe will it take to heat to 58 degrees when it is 10 degrees below zero?

W. B.

Since you do not mention the size of pipe you are to use, I have figured the requirements of the house on the basis of using 2-inch pipe. In order to maintain a temperature of 58 degrees it will require the use of 1,600 feet of 2-inch pipe. This can be distributed into four coils of four pipes each, one pipe in each coil serving as a flow, with three returns. If fewer coils are desired, the size of the flow pipe to each will require to be larger than 2-inch. If three coils are used each flow should be 2½-inch pipe. L. C. C.

ABOUT BOILERS.

How many square feet of radiation can be allowed per horse-power in rating a boiler for steam heating? How can I rate a tubular boiler of any given dimension and number of flues of given diameter? What is the ratio between flue area and grate surface?

W. H. C.

The basis for estimating horse-power in boilers of various types is quite different and is not the basis on which the heating capacity of the boilers is rated. The heating capacity is computed from the area of the boiler exposed to the action of the heated gases, or its heating surface. Roughly speaking, one square foot of heating surface in a boiler will care for eight square feet of radiation in the greenhouse, but this varies with the style of heating and the temperature to be maintained. The ratio existing between grate surface and heating surface in the boiler depends on the character of the fuel used. One to forty is the usual ratio for hard coal and one to eighty for soft coal.

We will be glad to give specifications for specific cases, which is the only satisfactory plan. L. C. C.

PIPING EIGHT GREENHOUSES.

We have eight north and south houses, even span, connected, each 18x100. The valleys are six feet high, ridges eleven feet. We wish to grow carnations in three houses and Grand Rapids lettuce in the remaining five. The mercury seldom falls below 15 degrees below zero. How much 2-inch pipe shall we need and how should it be arranged? Could we have a 6-inch flow at the north end, running east and west, connect the 2-inch pipe with a manifold, run the 2-inch along the west sides of the other houses and back again on the east side of the same house, connecting into the return at the north end, which is a 4-inch? R. B.

The arrangement of the main riser, or flow pipe, is all right, and it can be carried near the gable or near the floor, whichever is more convenient, provided both the flow and returns are at least three feet above the water line of the boiler. The piping of the houses will give the best satisfaction if arranged about as follows: Carry a 2-inch flow under the ridge of each house from the main riser to the south end of the house; there divide it to supply the coils to be located under the benches or on the side walls. In either event, with steam, it will be better to use 1¼-inch pipe for the returns or main heating pipes and each house should have nine such pipes supplied from the one 2-inch flow. The nine returns if arranged in manifolds on the side walls should be united to empty into the main return, which, if it is a 2-inch, will be ample for the plant in question. L. C. C.

ACCELERATING CIRCULATION.

In the Review of January 10 there is a query from J. A., regarding his heating system. I would like to offer him a few suggestions. I cannot from his description fully make out just how his pipes are arranged, but think I understand enough to locate his trouble.

He says there are six flows, leaving a main, with risers about ten inches high, and these go to the far end of the house and return through ten returns; I presume, to a main and thence to the bottom of his boilers. Now, he does not say what size that main is. I take it that this main runs across the end of the house and the six flows come off at certain distances by tee branches. Now, I think here is the trouble: Those tees have the outlet on the upper side of the main, and rise ten inches to an elbow. Those outlets are, perhaps, the same size as the main and flows. If so, the circulation is too free in the first one or two flows nearest the boiler, robbing the branches farther along; and the harder you fire the worse it is, as the hotter the water the more ready it is to escape through those openings and return to the boiler.

If this is about the way the pipes are laid out, the tees from the main to the flows should be on their sides, with a piece of horizontal pipe eighteen inches or two feet long with an elbow to the riser. I would also reduce this piece of horizontal pipe to three inches in the first three branches and shorten the other two to twelve inches, and let the last one be a mere nipple; or let the outlet be on the upper side. I have found it bad practice to take branches from the upper side for hot water without reducing them by at least one-half or putting on a valve in the riser to control the flow when there are branches taken off beyond on the same main.

A valve between the boilers is not necessary. They can both be connected up to the main flow and return, and either or both boilers be used at the same time. His boiler-room will not be so warm if a proper circulation is obtained in the pipes, which this arrangement should give. R. G. MILFORD.

ELEVATE EXPANSION TANK.

I would like to say a few words in reply to the article by R. G. Milford in the REVIEW of January 10. When he says that the height of the expansion tank has no bearing on the efficiency of the heating plant, I have to differ with him. I do not mean that it has any effect on the circulation; but with a high tank it is possible to heat the water to considerably more than 212 degrees, which is of great importance in a very cold spell.

Where a water supply tank is necessary, as in most country places, it is by far the best expansion tank that could be devised. Mine is something over forty feet above the boiler, giving a pressure of about twenty pounds, and, in consequence, we have several times run all night with the hot water thermometer showing 230 to 240 degrees. If any one thinks this is not greater efficiency than a low tank could give, let him try it in unusually cold weather.

My connection is as follows: The tank is at the farther end of the greenhouse from the boiler, about 150 feet. The 1½-inch main supply pipe from the tank runs under the first bench to the boiler-pit and into a return near the boiler, and is tapped in several places for water pipes to run through the various houses. A ¾-inch pipe is taken from the flow on the heating coil nearest the tank and runs up and into the tank beside the supply pipe. Thus I have a constant circulation of hot water from the boiler to the tank and down to the supply pipe. On the ¾-inch pipe to the tank there is a brass stop-cock which is nearly closed; only an opening is left about the thickness of a knife-blade. This is ample and prevents waste of heat.

The principal advantage of this circulation is, that there is no danger of any pipes to the tank freezing in any weather, even if they were entirely uncovered; and your tank water is always warm for watering plants. W. R. GRAY.

PIPE FOR HEATING.

I intend to build a carnation house 14x90. The mercury sometimes reaches 5 degrees below zero. How many 1½-inch returns should be required to maintain proper temperature? Would 2-inch flows be enough to supply required amount of returns. L. H.

Yes, two 2-inch flow pipes will be sufficient to provide for the radiation in the house 14x90 feet. The piping should consist of two 2-inch flows and twelve 1½-inch returns. If these can be arranged in two manifolds it will be satisfactory. L. C. C.

DOVER, N. H.—Charles A. Davis will run a wagon and establish a branch at York Beach the coming summer.

BRACEVILLE, O.—Florists here all report a big holiday trade and everything cleaned out by noon Christmas.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—Spring is on the way; violets were seen in bloom last week in the open.

S. H. W.

This little pest is now widely spread and known. The only sure application for its destruction is the cyanide gas, the formula for which you will find in last week's REVIEW. One application is not enough. The gas will kill all the fully developed insects, but will not destroy the eggs, so in two or three weeks after the first fumigation you must give the house another dose of the gas with every hope that they will be entirely destroyed.

All who saw our exhibit at the Toronto Convention last week pronounced the BAUR CLIP and PLYER for mending split carnations a great success. "The slickest thing I ever saw."—A prominent New York wholesaler. "Every up-to-date carnation grower will have one."—A grower from Philadelphia. "You've got the only thing."—A practical grower from eastern Pennsylvania. "I came to see the thing and have been convinced that it is all that you claim for it."—This from a Canadian grower who brought some hard cases of splits with him and saw us promptly turn them into first-class carnations. We solicited no personal testimonials and no personal orders, well knowing that all who saw this up-to-date device working would go home satisfied that he needed an outfit. The way orders have come in since has proven the correctness of our prediction. YOU who have not seen it need it as much as those who did—you more than need it—you must have it, or drop behind in the procession as an up-to-date grower. It is what you have long been looking for and what you will need every day until settled warm weather sets in. You have racked your brain for some practical means of mending your split flowers, even though you may be only a small grower. You have thought of the good coal and energy you have been wasting every year raising split carnations that found no profitable market. You used clumsy rubber bands and what not to fix them up, only to find that the job was not much better after than before. Here is something that solves your problem as far as it ever will be solved until carnations stop splitting—as far as it ever needs to be solved—a little practically INVISIBLE wire CLIP that holds the calyx and petals in their natural position without in the least affecting any other part of the flower. It does not make a wound that will cause the bloom to wilt before its natural time. It is to all intents and purposes part and parcel of the calyx and holds with a grip of iron. IT CAN'T COME LOOSE. It is so PRACTICAL AND FREE FROM ALL OBJECTION that it will make your split flowers, after mending, sell with those that were not split. A flower properly mended with this device is not a split flower—it is a first-class flower in every way and serves every purpose that will a flower in which the accident of splitting did not occur. Our PLYER for putting on these CLIPS is a wonderful instrument—wonderful in simplicity and in the work it does. With a little practice the operator can do the work twice as fast as it can be done in any other way and do it much better. Time is money, and if you both save time and do a perfect job you are doubly the gainer. SEND FOR THIS UP-TO-DATE OUTFIT TODAY. Convince yourself. Your money will not be lost, for we will cheerfully return it if you are not fully satisfied with your bargain. Give it a fair trial and it will convince you that it is just what you have been looking for. It will save its price every few days that you have it and will help to pay your coal bill, as it helps to pay ours.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Easter Lilies.

We are experiencing a much colder winter than a year ago, and one which so far has given us an abnormal proportion of sunless weather. February will have arrived before these notes reach the majority of readers. It is a short month and usually a snowy and cold one. Easter comes early this year, and a great deal of care will be necessary to get lilies and other flowering plants in on time. The buds on Easter lilies should be showing so that they can be counted by the middle of February. By hard forcing, flowers may be had even if the buds do not show till the end of the month, but six weeks is none too long to allow for their proper development. It is better to have them in bloom, and hold them back in a cool house for a few days, rather than attempt to force them almost to death in the last few days.

Assuming that the plants are in about the right stage, give them a night temperature of 55 degrees, syringe overhead twice a day and see that they are not allowed to become dry at the root. Drop a little tobacco dust or juice in the top of the shoots for the benefit of the omnipresent green aphis. As the pots will be well filled with roots, give some liquid stimulants once a week to keep them toned up.

We are this season trying a good many Azores longiflorums and they have the smallest percentage of disease of any on our place. The Bermuda stock is far less satisfactory.

If some of your plants have buds well advanced, and you wish to retard them, do not place them in a cold house or most of the buds will be destroyed. Keep fairly warm until the first flowers are ready to open. Then place in a cooler structure.

If there are any bulbs still unpotted and you need same for Memorial day trade, lose no time in getting them into the soil.

The popular hardy garden lily, L. candidum, will be difficult to get in flower by the end of March. This lily dislikes hard forcing. Better hold back the plants for Memorial day rather than ruin them in a vain effort to secure some for Easter.

Rambler Roses.

If ramblers were started in December they will now have shoots several inches in length and it should be possible to see the buds in a few days. Give them a light, sunny location; syringe only on bright days; keep a little sulphur painted on the pipes to hold mildew in check; water carefully, and if the plants have been grown right along in pots provide some liquid food.

There can be no question but that this class of roses is far and away better when pot-grown all the time. They force better, break more evenly and give larger trusses of flowers. Crimson Rambler, to be in season for Easter, should have the buds just peeping. The new pink forms, such as Lady Gay, Dorothy Perkins, and others, need fully two weeks longer than Crimson Rambler to come in. They will stand a fairly brisk heat now, 60 degrees at night being hot enough. Later batches started now will provide salable plants in April. The pink forms have proven better sellers than the crimson, being less common and of a pleasing color.

Hydrangeas.

Hydrangeas are less grown for Easter than a few years ago, most growers preferring to have them in flower about Memorial day. Well shaped and bloomed plants, however, usually sell well. The flower heads should now be discernible, in which case they should be all right by March 31. Hydrangeas need liberal supplies of water, with liquid manure or a chemical surfacing once a week.

Probably some plants will not throw much bloom, but will provide good cuttings. Take off a good batch of these and place in a warm propagating bench, where they will soon root and make nice plants for another year. Some buyers prefer the pink forms of H. Otaksa, while others consider blue the best shade. An absolutely pure white one would probably please all elements.

Astilbe.

Astilbes, or as they are more popularly called, spiræas, are always useful at Easter. They are comparatively cheap plants, but can be put to diverse uses. They will stand hard forcing until the flowers show color, when they should be placed in a cooler house. The old variety, A. Japonica, has to quite a large extent been displaced by its improved form, A. Japonica compacta multiflora, A. astilboides, and the fine new variety, Gladstone. The three latter sorts need about two weeks longer to fully develop than does the older sort. By this time the plants should have started to grow. Give them a night temperature of 60 degrees for a month yet, gradually lowering the temperature as the flowers commence to open. They need copious supplies of water and when the pots are well filled with roots there is little danger of an oversupply. As they grow spread them out to give them a chance to develop. In fumigating use great care, as they are very easily injured.

Mirror Decoration of Winsor Carnation and Elegantissima Fern.
(One of the Toronto exhibits of the F. R. Pierson Co.)

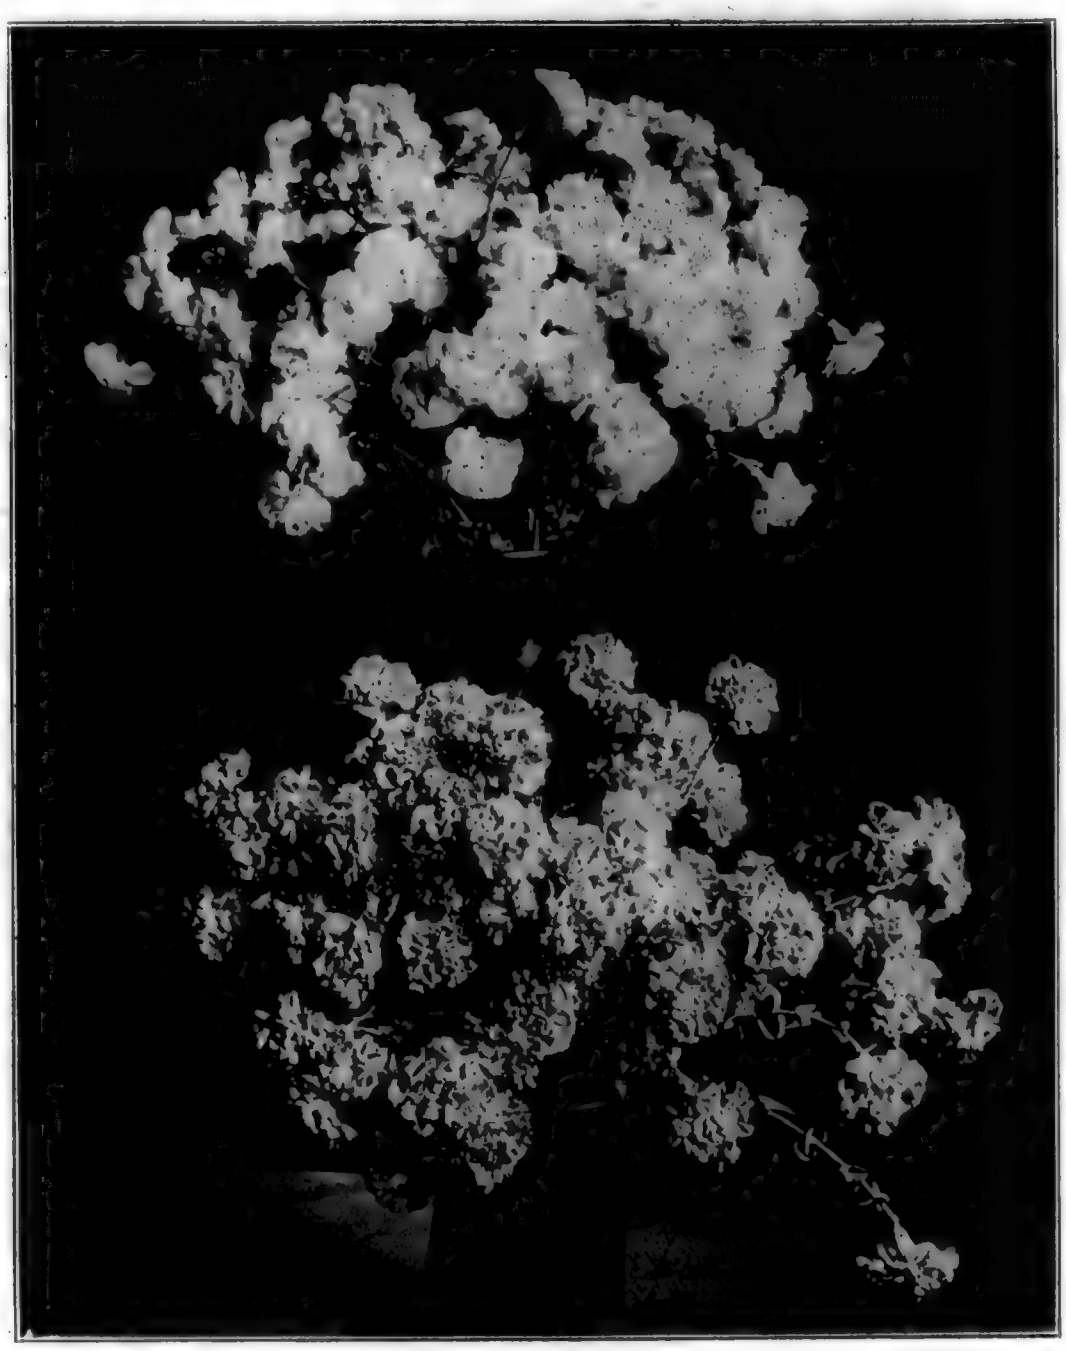
Marguerites.

Nicely grown marguerites make very serviceable Easter plants. Both the white and yellow varieties flower freely and are excellent for house or church decoration. Do not pinch plants any more which are wanted by March 31. If any are in 6-inch pots and becoming potbound give them a shift to 8-inch. Use rich compost and press it firmly around the edges of the pots. A light, sunny house, about 50 degrees at night, will suit them. Feed liberally when well matted with roots and on no consideration allow them to become dry. The new white variety, Queen Alexandra, makes an excellent pot plant and has jumped into great favor.



Cut flowers of marguerites meet with an excellent sale in many of the markets. A piece of bench into which some old plants headed back were set late in August are now giving a wealth of flowers on fine stems. They are popular with the most critical flower buyers.

Bulbous Stock.

It is too early yet to start tulips or narcissi for Easter, but while flowers are so scarce as at present a nice crop of these flowers is proving profitable. That grand early tulip, La Reine, is now coming with a good length of stem. It remains as popular as ever. Batches of most of the other early varieties can now be brought in at intervals of a few days when they are well started. Be sure to remove them to a cool house when well opened. On such a place they will last well. Narcissus Golden Spur is now extra good and it is one of the finest of all the yellow daffodils. Such varieties as Emperor, Empress, Sir Watkin, Victoria and Horsfieldii brought in the middle of January are pushing up their spikes. These easily can be held in check by removal to a north house. N. pœticus ornatus has already appeared in the market. It remains one of the most popular of the narcissi. The old N. pœticus is a good Easter sort. It dislikes hard forcing, but if placed now in a carnation house temperature it will be in season.

Azaleas.

If not already placed in heat, lose no time in placing azaleas wanted for Easter in a warm house. Apollo remains one of the best scarlets. Mme. Van der Cruyssen, Simon Mardner, Vervæneana, Empereur de Bresil, Niobe and Sigismund Rucker are all excellent varieties. A warm, moist house will suit these Indian azaleas. Syringe them twice a day, or four times in very bright weather. If growth starts ahead of the flowers, pull it out. Withhold syringing as the flowers show color. Azalea mollis, if well budded, makes a fine pot plant. It will stand quite hard forcing and can be had in flower in six weeks in a warm house. Started about February 15, they should be in season for Easter. They need a thorough freezing before being forced.

Upper Vase Alma Ward, Exhibited by Cottage Gardens Co.
Lower Vase No. 348, Exhibited by Dailledouze Bros.

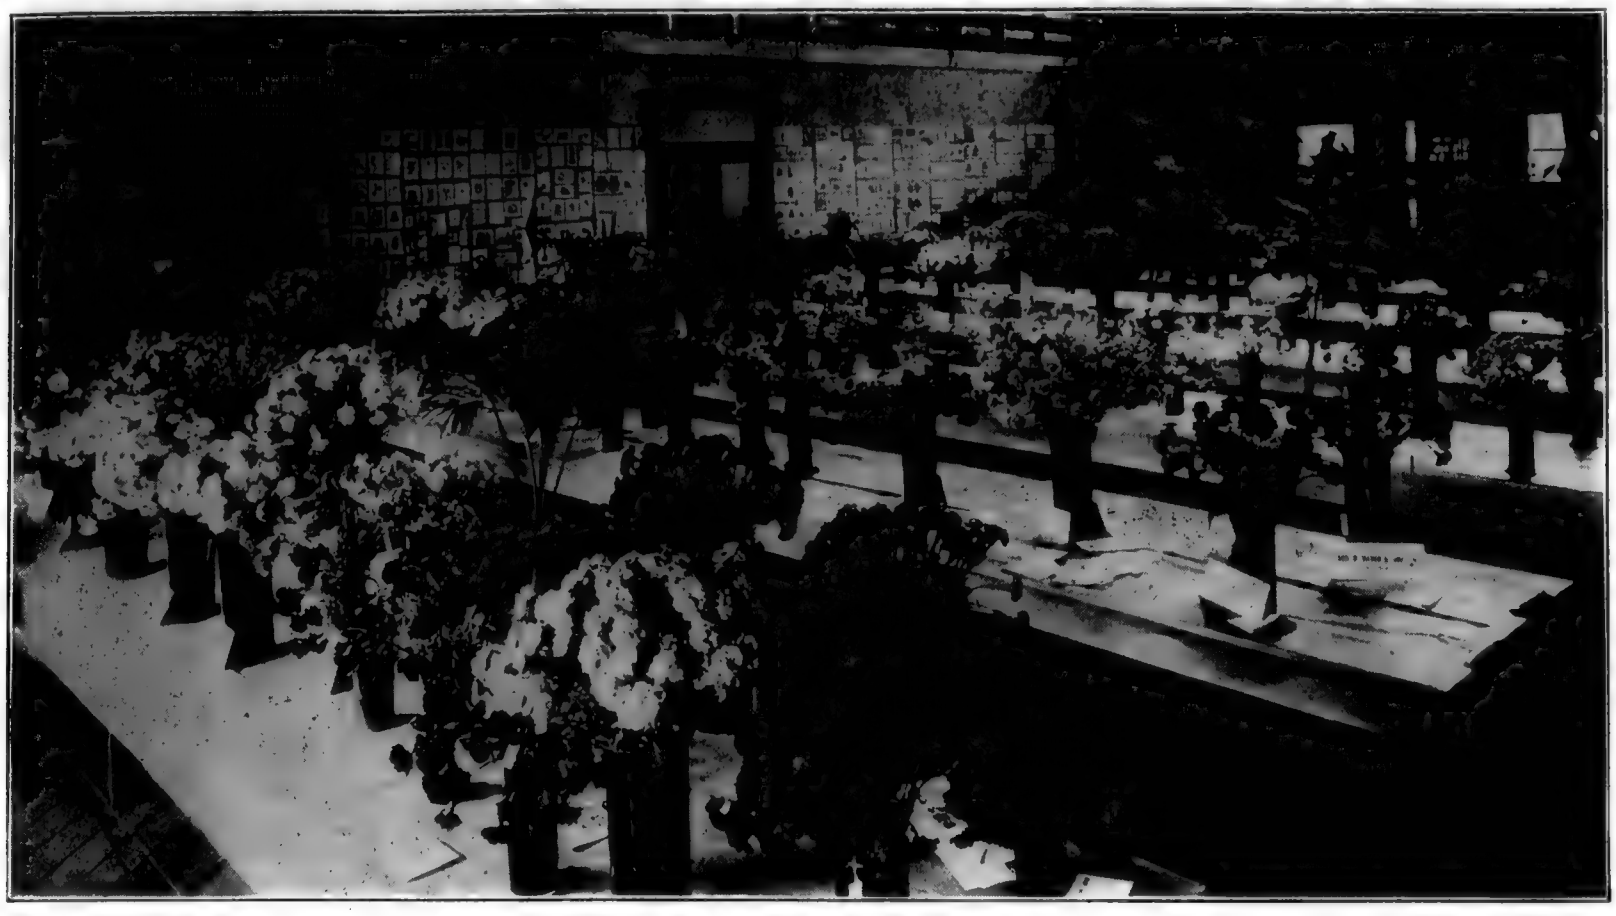
Gloxinias.

Dormant tubers of gloxinias may be started now in flats of leaf-mold or moss in a warm house. Water well at first and then keep on the dry side until they are started sufficiently to be potted off. The gloxinia is not, perhaps, of as much value to florists as many other plants. A nicely flowered plant will always attract a retail customer, and they are fine for the store window. The flowers are also useful at Memorial day for the choicer bouquets, for which holiday roots started at once will give a nice lot of flowers. Seed sown now in pans of light compost (if sterilized, all the better) will give good flowering plants for late summer. As the seeds are extremely fine, the compost in the pan should be made perfectly level, watered and the seed evenly scattered on the surface. Do not cover except with a sheet of paper. Water through a fine sprinkler and the seed should germinate in three weeks in a warm and moist house.

Seed Sowing.

It is too early to sow asters for outdoors. If a bench will be at disposal after Easter try the experiment of planting it with Queen of the Earlies. They succeed well under glass in a cool house in four to five inches of compost and for any who need flowers for funeral work they will come in very useful before the outdoor crop is in season. Plant six inches apart between the plants and nine inches between the rows.

Stocks to flower for Memorial day may still be sown. A good selection of ten weeks' is the best. If verbenas are not sown, start them as soon as possible. Salvia splendens you can keep in the packets a month yet, but ageratum can be sown at any time. Petunias and pentstemons ought to be started during February, and do not forget a packet of the excellent and free-flowering Primula obconica, of which there are now some fine strains. Sown thus early, excellent plants may be had for Christmas sales.



Cannas and Dahlias.

It is altogether too early to start either cannas or dahlias. Examine the canna roots and if they are becoming dry, water moderately. Too dry conditions are as harmful as too much water. Dahlias should be examined and any decaying roots removed. Unless it is desired to work up stock of some novelty, we would not advise starting for two months yet.

Logansport, Ind.—January 19 water backed up in the boiler-pit at John A. Newby's greenhouses and put out the fire. For two days every effort was made to keep out the frost, but in the end much stock was ruined. The loss is estimated from $6,000 to $7,000.

General View of the Toronto Exhibition of the American Carnation Society.

CONVENTION AFTERMATH

A BRILLIANT SUCCESS.

The great American carnation convention to which Toronto florists have been looking forward ever since the announcement came from Boston that it would meet in Toronto in 1907, is now a matter of history and, as far as we can see, was a success in every particular.

A great part of the success of the show, as far as Toronto was concerned, must be attributed to Mr. Dunlop, the president, who worked with untiring energy and who took every opportunity to boost the Toronto convention since his election a year ago. We might also mention two, outside of the trade, who took an active part in the working out of the plan for the reception of the delegates; namely, R. J. Score and H. R. Franklin. These gentlemen are connected with the Horticultural Association and lent their valuable services in every way possible to bring the convention to a successful conclusion.

We were glad to see so many ladies take advantage of the trip to Toronto and our ladies' committee took them in hand and filled in the time to the best possible advantage. The committee regrets the little oversight on the part of the chairman, who, in his multitude of detail to look after, omitted to provide carriages to take the ladies from the hotel to the theater and back. The local florists who took in the banquet enjoyed it very much and the good fellowship of the American guests was much appreciated.

To be president of the American Carnation Society a man has to be thoroughly versed in the rules of debate as well as the bylaws of the society. The society now numbers in its membership some able debaters and, at the closing session the chairman had several times to look up the ruling as the debaters warmed up to their subject. This is what makes the sessions of an association of this kind both interesting and profitable. We find men of long experience freely giving their experiences in different tests to uphold their point of argument. The younger and more reticent members are therefore learning many valuable lessons and get pointers that will be of great benefit to them during the coming year.

Papers and Discussions.

Three valuable papers were read on the last day, from carnation growers in Europe, showing the great increase in the demand for the American carnations in Europe. C. W. Ward said that he had done considerable exporting to Europe, of carnation cuttings, and his method of shipment was to leave good air-space in the boxes with lots of air-holes. He preferred shipping well-rooted cuttings well wrapped with moss to keep down the expense of transportation, as plants from soil made the freight rate to Europe very high. He also found that many shipments were spoiled in transportation on account of the hold of the vessel being very warm; consequently the stuff started to rot. If the hold was cool the stock traveled in dormant state and usually arrived in good condition.

A matter that received considerable discussion was a motion that was carried by the convention that new varieties must be named and registered before entering for competition. Many of the growers claimed that it should be left optional to the exhibitor until after the award was made, as many new varieties would never be sent out if they did not receive the awards, and consequently names would be appearing on the register that were never sent out. However, it was considered that this might lead to considerable confusion. It was decided to adopt the recommendation of Secretary Herr that all varieties must be registered to be eligible for competition at convention exhibitions.

The Banquet.

The banquet, tendered by the Electoral District Society, Toronto Gardeners' and Florists' Association and the Horticultural Society to the American Carnation Society, was held at the Queen's hotel, and was in every particular a huge success. International good-fellowship was the predominant feeling, and the speeches delivered in proposing and replying to various toasts would have been a credit to any association where after-dinner speeches form a more important part of the profession than it does in floriculture.

The banquet room was elaborately decorated with carnations, asparagus, ferns, cyclamens and begonias. At the front of the banquet room two immense flags, the Union Jack and Old Glory, hung draped from each side. Something over 200 sat down and did justice to a first-class menu. A few complained of there being no liquor, but the committee considered that it was not in the interest of horticulture, or of a good banquet, to have liquor served at the tables.

The toastmaster's chair was occupied by the retiring president, John H. Dunlop, while seated at his left was F. H. Lemon, of Richmond, Ind., president-elect for 1907. The first toast was "The King and President," proposed by Mr. Dunlop, and responded to by singing "God Save the King" and "America," assisted by the orchestra. The Blight Male Quartette, of which Jas. Milne, of Dunlop's, is base singer, gave us "The Old Brigade" with several encores.

"Canada and the United States" was proposed by F. R. Pierson and responded to by C. W. Ward for Canada, as a Canadian, and Wm. Algie, Alton, Ont., for the United States, as an American. This toast brought out fine speeches and, although Mr. Ward sometimes forgot his bearings, yet he quickly took his soundings and landed again on Canadian territory. Mr. Pierson said the last meeting had been held at Boston, which city had set a high standard difficult to equal. It was the home of floriculture, perhaps without its equal in the United States. "I want to say," said Mr. Pierson, "that Toronto has out-Bostoned Boston with the most successful meeting in the history of the society."

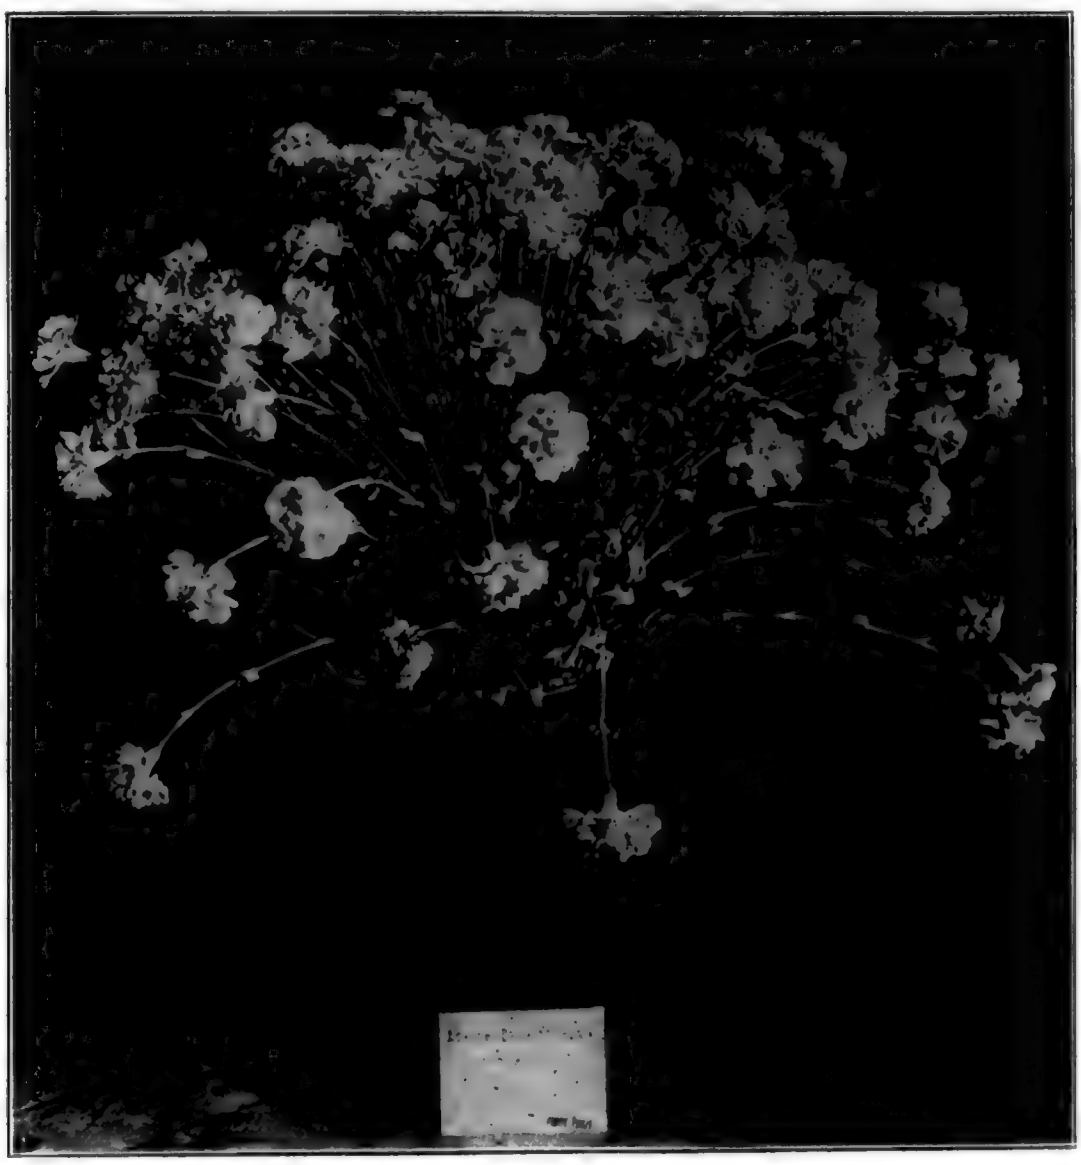
Mr. Algie's speech was prefaced with the remark that twenty-five years ago he discovered near Boston a pink and white Enchantress and, as an outcome of this discovery, he has four handsome Bradts. Of course that was equivalent to the admission that his better-half was an American. However, we can remind Americans that Mr. Algie could make equally as patriotic a British speech as he did American.

"The Mayor and Corporation" was proposed by R. J. Score, chairman of the reception committee, and responded to by Alderman J. J. Graham on behalf of the mayor, who was unable to be present. Alderman Graham stated that of all conventions held in Toronto, the convention city, none had made a greater impression upon him as bringing men of business ability and integrity, and he hoped that the impression that they took home with them of Toronto would be as favorable as that they left.

"Society of American Florists and Canadian Horticultural Society" was proposed by T. W. Duggan, of the Dale Estate, Brampton, and replied to by W. J. Stewart, P. J. Hauswirth and Thomas Manton. Mr. Hauswirth, being secretary of the Society of American Florists, called attention to the international flower show which is under contemplation for 1908 and which is to be held in Chicago. He stated that they are now working on a guarantee fund, and hoped that all who could would interest themselves in this.

The toast to the "American Carnation Society" was proposed by William Gammage, of London, and responded to by Mr. Lemon, E. G. Gillett, Cincinnati, and J. A. Valentine, Denver. Mr. Lemon particularly emphasized his desire to have the hearty coöperation of carnation growers during the coming year, as he felt his task, in filling Mr. Dunlop's place and to keep up to the standard set by him, was a difficult one, and hoped to see all present in Washington next year.

The trophies won at the show were then presented by W. N. Rudd, who caused much merriment in his inimitable way of getting speeches from the recipients. A highly amusing incident was his handing over to Mr. Ward a cup and calling for a speech. A few minutes afterwards he noted his mistake that this trophy was not won by Mr. Ward. However, Mr. Ward had got his bearings and noted the same; rising, he called Mr. Rudd's attention to the fact that he did not think he had won that cup. Mr. Rudd did not seem to be disturbed by his mistake and turned the joke on Mr. Ward as he simply remarked that he just wanted to see if Mr. Ward would keep it, as these Americans were after everything in sight, whether it belonged to them or not. Mr. Rudd complimented the Canadians on so successfully competing and capturing so many of the premiums.



The one feature of some of the Americans who had not received the top-notch award that commended itself to the audience was the statement that while they did not get the prizes they had come after, they were quite satisfied, and would redouble their energies to get the highest awards next year.

The toast, "The Allied Societies," was proposed by J. Bennett, of Montreal, and responded to by W. F. Kasting, of Buffalo, and J. R. Franklin, of Toronto.

The toast, "The Press," was proposed by H. M. Altick, of Dayton, who highly complimented the horticultural press on the great work being done for horticulture through this medium. He took this opportunity of mentioning the great work that had been done by Mr. Scott, of Buffalo, for horticulture and floriculture through his contributions to the press, and also regretted his inability, through sickness, to be present. He called for a silent toast, coupled with a prayer for his recovery. J. Austin Shaw responded for the American press and H. B. Cowan for the Canadian press.

The toast, "The Ladies," was proposed by Hermann Simmers in a happy speech, and responded to by L. E. Marquisee, Syracuse, who kept the audience in good humor. It might be here remarked that the ladies were present for the closing addresses, having come from the Princess theater, where they were entertained as guests of the Toronto ladies.

Friday morning the visitors, 100 strong, went to Brampton by special train to inspect the greenhouses. They came back at noon and spent the afternoon visiting the greenhouses in Toronto. Everyone seemed to be quite satitfied that the convention was a success in every way, and complimented the local committees on the way they had carried out the details in looking after the interests of the visitors and exhibits. CONVENTION ECHOES.

Billy Kasting's big heart is always overflowing. He collected over $400 on the Dale special train in behalf of the wife and family of the old favorite, Jimmie Hartshorne.

The exhibition hall was chilly for humans, but just right for the flowers, all of which kept perfectly to the close. The hospitals were gladdened by the distribution of the exhibits on Friday.

Pierson's mirror decoration of Winsor and Elegantissima was greatly admired. It reflected credit upon the artist brought all the way from New York to construct it.

The bridal chamber fell to Messrs. Young and Traendly at the Queens. The decorations on Friday morning, shown only to a few of the elect, were chaste and unique and so in keeping with the artistic ability of these demonstrative deacons. The consultations in these parlors lasted until nearly daylight and were participated in by many of the bright lights of the convention.

The Toronto ladies were unanimously voted the "princesses of entertainers" and they were as handsome and healthful as enthusiastic.

Many of the familiar faces were missed because of illness, none more than that of William Scott, of Buffalo.

There was a touch of political expertness in the caucus and primary work in behalf of Washington that manifested the practiced art of the adept, but there will be a great show and a big crowd at the next convention. We will miss the delightful 15 degrees below zero weather, however, and everybody wants to go to Canada again and no one will regret how soon the day.

Harry Altick loses none of his enthusiasm in behalf of McKinley day.

The long trip of J. A. Valentine and his lieutenants from the Rockies shows the right spirit; the enthusiasm that makes conventions worth while. While in the east these gentlemen will color the great white way and visit New York, Boston and Philadelphia growers.

Peter Crowe has trained down to under 300 pounds, but still holds the medal for good nature and corporosity. Canada had nothing to compare with him.

Those who take a little something for their stomachs' sake were taken aback to find all medicinal centers closed at 11 o'clock and all lights out at 12 o'clock. Everybody has to be good in Toronto. The snow typifies the character of the inhabitants.

John Dunlop was radiant with delight and his smile went away back as far as the eye could reach; and the merriment in Tom Manton's eyes never failed an instant.

W. J. Lawrence and his song birds made abundant melody. A better program of song and speech never graced a carnation banquet.

One man from the east made it his honeymoon trip, but the name takes up too much space and you will have to guess it.

P. Beuerlein, of Long Island, slept in his fur cap, as usual. He was the only kicker against the climate. Pete "never could stand the cold."

D. J. Sinclair, who has the only wholesale houses in Canada, has a cinch and looks it. He is a young man of great ambition and energy and speaks enthusiastically of the future of the cut flower business there.

William P. Craig and his new fern were both impressive and have both come to stay for many a year, we hope.

Richard Witterstaetter grows more Aristocratic every year. His exhibits were centers of interest.

Harry Bunyard felt the influence of the "sozodont" in the air and kept his companions merry.

Some of the Chicago ladies put the surplus wealth of their worser halves into Canadian furs, a wise and unregrettable decision. The new secretary of the S. A. F. said his year's salary was largely provided for in this practical way and George Asmus thinks furs are better and safer any day than diamonds.

Late trains were the fashion last week. Strange to say the train from Philadelphia was on time and Boston five hours behind.

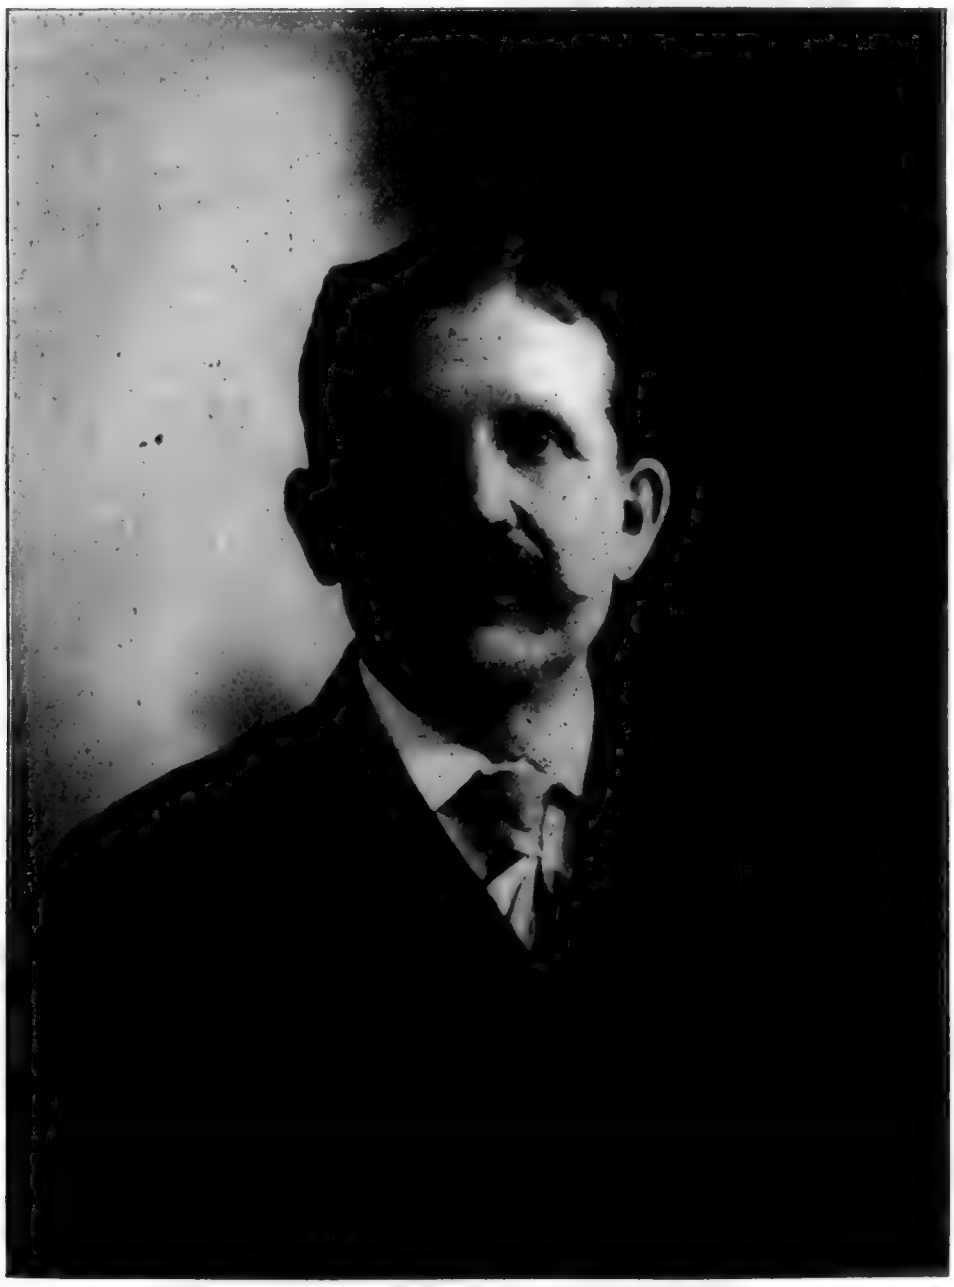
The consensus of opinion is that this was the best convention in the history of the Carnation Society. So say all of us and "God save the King."

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

MR. WARD'S ADDRESS.

[The reply to the Lieutenant-Governor's address of welcome to the American Carnation Society, at Toronto, January 23, 1907, by Chas. Willis Ward, of Queens, N. Y.]

That which impresses Americans most when they consider their Canadian neighbors is the vastness of the still undeveloped resources of Canada.



Some of Canada's Resources.

From the Atlantic to Lake Winnipeg, and from the northern boundary of Lake Superior to near the southern shore of Hudson bay, are still standing countless thousands of millions of valuable timbered forests, and the same is true along the western borders of the Rocky mountains, among the Selkirks and bordering the Pacific ocean from Vancouver northward to Alaska. While I have no figures to support the assertion, I will risk the opinion that Canada has today ten times the area standing in original forests than now remains in the United States, and the day is not far distant when the largest proportion of the timber consumed in the United States must of necessity be drawn from Canadian forests.

Again, Canada has almost exhaustless deposits of both anthracite, bituminous and splint coals, the extent of which have not yet been determined, but which may be fairly said to reach along the base of the Rocky mountains from the northern border of the United States well up into the Saskatchewan region and possibly to the shores of the Arctic ocean.

Your grazing lands extend from the western line of your midcontinental timber belt to the Rocky mountains, and from the northern line of Minnesota northward almost to the region of perpetual snow. And a large proportion of these grazing lands are especially adapted to grain raising and give as rich crops as were ever garnered from the richest grain raising districts of Indiana, Illinois, Minnesota and the Dakotas in their palmiest days, and Canada is rapidly becoming the granary of the American continent. Then, too, a large proportion of the agricultural lands lying between the Muskoka lake district and the Atlantic ocean are particularly adapted to the raising of wheat, barley and oats and serve to lend additional importance to Canada's immense grain productiveness; and the same can be said of a large proportion of the forested area lying between the Selkirk range and the Pacific ocean.

A considerable portion of your lands lying along the borders of the United States are well adapted to the raising of apples, pears, plums and cherries, so that the Canadian people need not suffer for the want of wholesome, home-grown fruits.

Charles Willis Ward.

Floriculture.

Canadian florists have already made their mark as expert growers of greenhouse products and on no part of the American continent are better and more perfect roses, carnations, chrysanthemums and violets produced than are grown by the leading florists of Toronto and its contiguous territory; and it has always been a pleasure for the members of the American Carnation Society and other kindred bodies to have with them their brother Canadian florists, as they have found them to be gentlemen well schooled in their profession and well fitted to give practical and valuable advice.

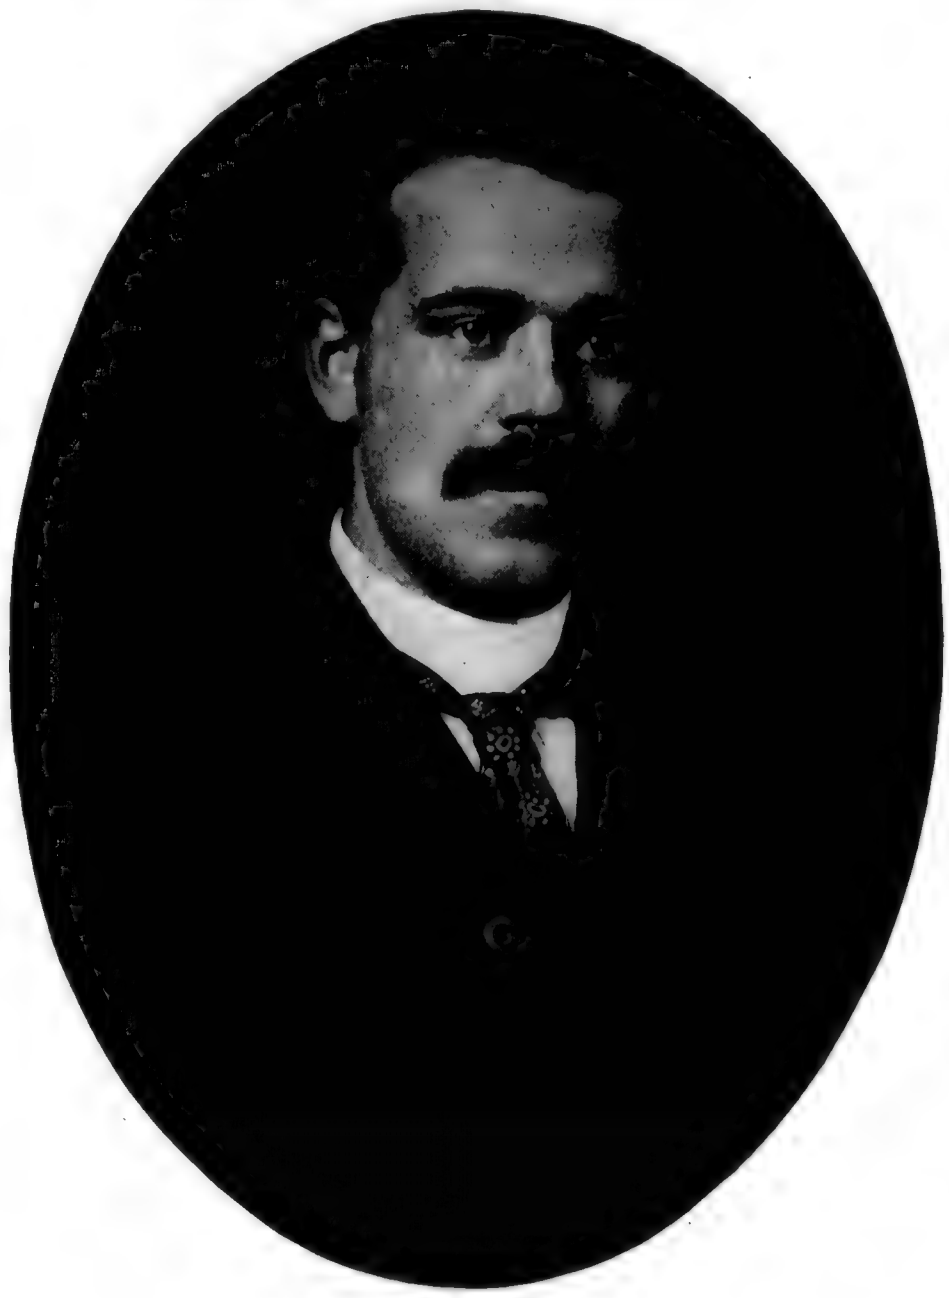
American Breeders' Association.

It has just been my pleasure to attend the sessions of the American Breeders' Association held last week at Columbus, Ohio, where during a period of five days I was called upon to preside at numerous sessions of its plant breeding section, and I can assure you Canadians, that we consider among our most valuable members the representatives of your different experiment stations, who have proven themselves to be among the most enthusiastic of our members and who have demonstrated their fitness to hold their positions by showing us the immensely practical results that have been secured in their experimental work. And they are now working hand and glove with the experimenters of the United States for the purpose of improving all horticultural products, as well as all branches of the animal raising industry; and I can assure you that the joint efforts of the practical experimenters of the two nations will certainly produce better results far more rapidly than if either nation attempted to go it alone.

The Canadian People.

When we come to compare the people of Canada with those of the United States, we find them to be practically of the same type and practically of the same origin. They are essentially American, each as much as the other. They are a vigorous, virile and energetic race, the result of the development of the human family upon this vast American continent. And I believe them to be practically the same people throughout, actuated by the same high ideals of brotherhood, honesty and fair dealing and both nations bent upon the development of our continental resources to the utmost. Our continent is a vast and fertile one. Its natural resources are not yet fully understood, and perhaps are not to be fully measured for centuries to come.

Our people being practically a homogeneous one, there can be no such race differences as exist upon the European continent, where several radically different types of mankind are cooped up within narrow boundaries which are so densely populated that annual migrations to other sections of the world are absolutely necessary in order to even up the struggle for existence. There can be no such difference in nationality as should cause material differences between the peoples and we should live in peace and harmony, free for all time from the discords that have perennially arisen among the densely populated nations of the European continent, where the struggle for existence has become so tense.



Personal Experiences With Canadians.

I must confess that I have a high regard for the people of Canada, for a considerable number of my own relatives are Canadians. Then, too, I have had a wide experience in the employment of Canadians in a practical business way. In my younger days I conducted large timber cutting operations in the lower peninsula of Michigan and a large percentage of my best woodsmen were Canadians. We invariably found that we secured the best choppers and sawyers, and the most careful and efficient teamsters from the ranks of the Canadians who annually came to Michigan to work in the lumber camps through the winter and returned to Canada, to care for their farms, during the summer season.

For the past twenty-five years I have employed young ladies in the capacity of stenographers, bookkeepers and private secretaries in my office, and three of the most efficient of them all were Canadian girls. Each one of them won my respect and esteem by the conscientious, faithful and efficient manner in which she discharged her duties, as well as by the ability which she displayed in her work, and I can truly say that they proved particularly efficient and congenial helpers.

A short time since I was taken ill in the city of Saginaw, Michigan, and when I requested my doctor to send me the most efficient trained nurse he could find in that city, he sent me a Canadian; and he afterwards told me that the best nurses that had come under his observation were Canadians. And a number of years ago, when Mrs. Ward went through a severe surgical operation and we asked one of the hospitals to furnish us with the most competent, conscientious and careful nurse that they could find, they sent us a Canadian; and that same nurse went down to her death in the flood at Galveston, her arms filled with little children whom she was vainly trying to save.

I count among my dearest friends many Canadians, and I can assure you all that the people of the United States hold the people of Canada in high respect and esteem. They are glad to see Canada develop and the Canadian people prosper. No jealousy or envy of Canadian prosperity exists among them and they will always stand ready to greet their Canadian brethren and applaud their accomplishments and exploits, and will always wish Canada Godspeed and the maximum measure of development, that she may fulfil to the fullest extent her manifest destiny. I can truly say that every citizen of the United States will join me in an, All hail to Canada! All hail to the Canadian people!

R. O. King.

And now a word to my brother Canadian florists. You all of you know that we of the United States have for many years held you in the highest esteem and the members of the American Carnation Society and the Society of American Florists have many times welcomed you heartily to their annual gatherings, and we have sought to make those welcomes pleasant and instructive ones, and we know that you have appreciated them, for have you not in turn invited us to meet with you and have you not here today shown that you are capable of welcoming your brethren from the United States even more heartily than they have hitherto welcomed you? Gentlemen, the visiting carnationists from the United States thoroughly appreciate the heartiness of your greetings and they will long remember this most auspicious occasion. And we all of us have come to the conclusion that when we decided to honor our American Carnation Society by electing a Canadian as its president, we made no mistake when we named your honored and worthy townsman, John H. Dunlop.

GREENHOUSE CONSTRUCTION.

[A synopsis of a paper by R. O. King, North Tonawanda, N. Y., read before the American Carnation Society at the Toronto Convention.]

During the last few years many papers have been read on greenhouse construction. The general methods of construction have been thoroughly described and most of the growers are agreed, for instance, that cypress is about the best thing to use for the woodwork, that iron posts are better than wood posts, that an iron gutter is better than a wood gutter, etc. All of these things are so familiar that it is hardly worth while going into further discussion about them.

It will, perhaps, be more interesting to take up some points of greenhouse construction which are just as important, but which have not received as much attention. For instance, the use of glass up to twenty-four inches in width makes a lighter and less expensive house than narrow glass. The choice of locality for a greenhouse plant should depend, among other things, on the amount of light available. The application of the scientific principles used in the design of large buildings and bridges to greenhouse construction is something which should interest the grower as well as the designer. The application of these principles has not been necessary in the ordinary construction of small houses, where the accumulated experience of many years has been a sufficient guide. When, however, it is necessary to design a house unlike anything previously constructed there is, of course, no experience to fall back on, so a safe design can only be worked out by the application of the scientific methods referred to.

Wide Glass.

Some years ago 16-inch glass was considered about the limit for greenhouse construction. More recently 18-inch glass has been used. In Canada a number of plants are built with 20-inch double diamond English glass. Twenty-inch glass is probably selected because twenty inches square is a good size for butting and it does not exceed forty united inches. In the United States, where lapped glass is most generally used, the size most in use is 16x24, with the bars sixteen inches apart. A few of the more daring growers have risked building their houses with the bars twenty-four inches apart and using this same size glass. In our own experience, a number of customers have put the glass in this way. In only one case do we know of any trouble having occurred. Such great advantages in economy of material and the lightness of construction are obtained by the use of this wide glass that it is worth making some study of the requirements that are necessary for the satisfactory use of 24-inch glass.

Breakage from Hail.

It seems unlikely that 24-inch glass will suffer any more damage from hail than 16-inch glass. The reason of this is that glass laid the 24-inch way has more of a chance to spring than glass laid the 16-inch way, so that in case of a sharp blow, such as from a hailstone, 24-inch glass, although really weaker, can give way more without breaking than can the 16-inch glass. Consequently the extra spring makes up for the extra weakness.

This action of hail was well illustrated at the Lancaster, N. Y., plant of W. J. Palmer & Son. In July, 1905, a hail storm passed over this plant and broke considerable glass. The house with 24-inch glass, which had just been built, did not suffer any more in proportion than the houses with 16-inch glass. In fact, the greatest damage was done on some 10-inch glass, though this was single thick. It seems that a hailstone big enough to break 24-inch glass will be big enough to break 16-inch glass, so the danger from hail need not worry anyone who wishes to use wide glass.

Dead Weight on Glass.

Glass is likely to be broken by the dead weight of large accumulations of snow and ice. For this reason it is interesting to determine just what weight glass can stand. In Canada, where everyone believes we have a great deal of snow, a number of growers are using 20-inch English double diamond. Now English double diamond is about as heavy as American single thick. A box of fifty feet of American single thick glass is supposed to weigh seventy pounds, while a box of 100 feet of English double diamond is supposed to weigh 140 pounds. It follows from this that our Canadian friends are using 20-inch single thick glass in localities where much more snow may be expected than in localities in the United States. In addition to this, more of the greenhouse plants in Canada are built on the ridge and furrow system, so that they get the full benefit of the weight of a sudden snow storm.

We have made some tests of the strength of American double thick glass taken the long way and the accompanying table shows the results obtained:

Test of Breaking Strength of 16 x 24 American, Double Thick, A Glass.

Supports 24 inches apart. Sand used for loading.

Weight of light	Load required to break light	Breaking load per square foot
4 lbs., 5 ozs.	107 lbs.	40.2 lbs.
4 lbs., 4 ozs.	40 lbs.	15.1 lbs.
3 lbs., 12 ozs.	57 lbs.	21.5 lbs.
4 lbs., 7 ozs.	61 lbs.	23.0 lbs.
4 lbs., 12 ozs.	110 lbs.	41.3 lbs.
4 lbs., 4 ozs.	95 lbs.	31.9 lbs.

The peculiar point about these results is that the strength does not depend at all on the thickness. You will notice that one light of almost the same thickness as the light which took 110 pounds to break, broke at only forty pounds. Another peculiar feature you will notice is that although the glass is supposed to be double thick, and each light should therefore weigh four pounds eleven and one-half ounces in order to make ninety pounds to a box of nineteen lights, there is not one light up to weight. You will probably find that this is the general case and although you pay for double thick glass you really get what ought to be called single thick.

Thickness of Glass.

The glass taken for our test was selected at random and the weights found therein are confirmed by some weights taken a short time ago in Philadelphia. Selecting two boxes at random each light was weighed carefully and in one box fourteen lights out of the nineteen weighed less than four pounds each. In the other, thirteen lights out of nineteen weighed less than four pounds each, and some of them were very much less than four pounds each. Leaving out of consideration two of three extra heavy lights in each box, the remainder of the glass was practically single thick. This probably explains why Canadian growers find English double diamond really as strong as American double thick. In order to cover this point the weight of six boxes from two different factories was taken. This glass was all labeled "A double thick" and was as fine looking glass as one usually sees. The average weight of one lot was 76.8 pounds per box and the other 80.8 pounds per box, making both lots very much under requirements of double thick glass.

Referring again to the test of the strength of glass, the peculiar fact that the strength does not depend on the thickness is probably explained by difference in annealing. If the glass for a greenhouse is to be selected from the point of view of strength, then no other qualification is more important and we should have some guarantee from the makers that the glass has been properly annealed. The purchase of properly annealed glass has not been given sufficient attention and it is very likely that a great deal of the annual breakage of glass in greenhouses is due to defective annealing. Certainly if you put some lights in your house which will only stand forty pounds and others which will stand over 100 pounds you must expect that the weak ones will go first. As glass is now manufactured it is perhaps impossible to devote special attention to greenhouse requirements. The glass people say that the workmen do not like to make greenhouse sizes because they can make more money on larger sizes. The greenhouse trade, however, is increasing rapidly and improvements are being made in the manufacture of glass, so that perhaps sometime we will be fortunate enough to have a factory making glass especially adapted for greenhouse work.

Sunshine in Different Localities.

In locating a greenhouse the only thing not usually considered is the amount of sunlight that is to be expected. Yet there is nothing more important and a guarantee of a good measure of sunlight would be a valuable asset for a greenhouse plant. Localities only 100 or 200 miles apart are found to have greatly different amounts of sunshine during the winter months. For instance, before locating the United States Cut Flower Co. plant at Elmira it was found that the sunshine to be expected in that locality is about double what would be expected in Buffalo. In order to illustrate the great difference in sunshine for different localities a table has been prepared covering the winter months for the last two years. It is only possible to give observation for points widely separated, owing to the extent of the territory covered, but it should be kept in mind that the difference shown by the table as occurring between points widely separated may also occur between what might be called local points, as in the case of Buffalo and Elmira as already referred to.

Though it is perhaps unnecessary, or rather unwise, to start a discussion as to the relative merits of houses built detached or built on the ridge and furrow system, still the consideration of this sunshine table leads to the observation that as lack of sunshine is the condition that confronts most of us, it is just as well to build houses to suit that condition. Now, to meet that condition you must try to cover as much ground surface as possible with as little structural material as you can get along with. The way to cover ground with a small quantity of material is to use the ridge and furrow system, making the pitch of the roof as low as possible and using as wide glass as you will risk. Remembering that we are meeting the condition of no sunshine, it also follows that it does not matter whether the houses run north and south or east and west. Finally, provided your houses are built to meet that worst of conditions, no sunshine, will they not then take care of themselves under better conditions; that is, with sunshine?

The Widest Span to Date.

It may be interesting to describe the process of designing a new type of greenhouse for which practically no data is furnished by previous actual building experiences. A design for an even-span house 150 feet wide and having only five rows of supporting posts has recently been completed. This house is a great departure from present standards and will set a record for wide houses which is not likely to be surpassed for some time, or at least until we can profit from the success or failure of the gentlemen who are willing to experiment on such a grand scale.

Beginning with the glass, it is desired to lay it with the suporting bars twenty-four inches apart. Referring to the table before stated, it is found that the average weight required to break the glass is thirty pounds per square foot. This is equivalent to about one foot of wet snow. The glass is hardly likely to be called upon to stand more than this, so the question of strength against dead weight can be considered settled.

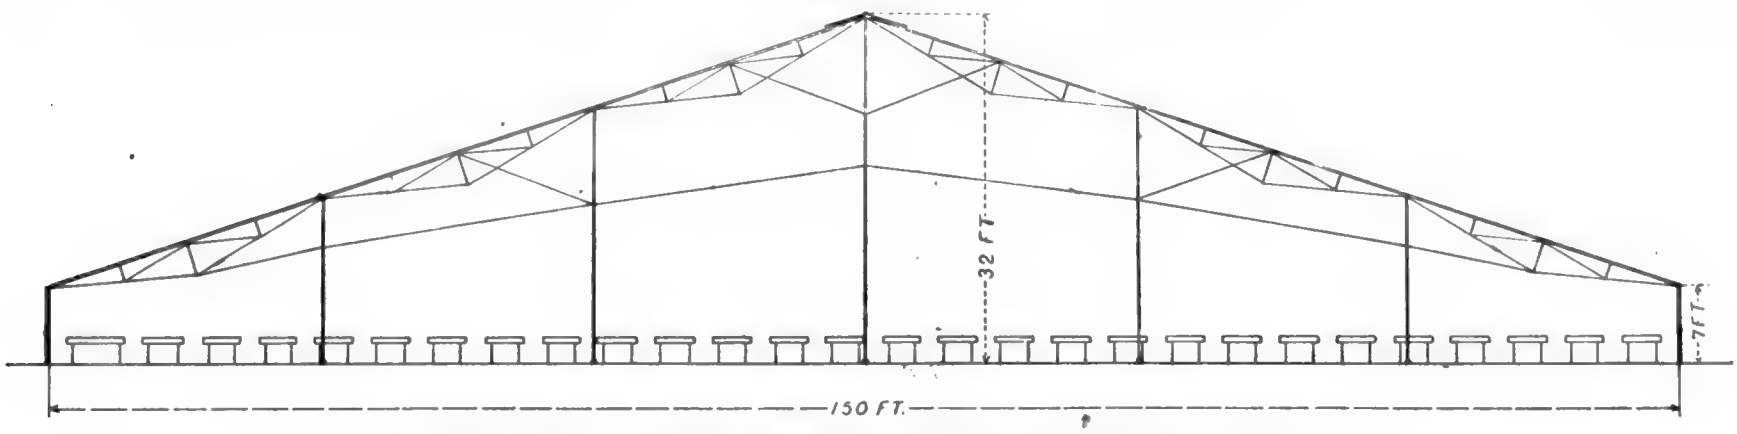
The framework of the house must now be made strong enough to carry somewhat more weight than the glass could stand, so that the glass would break before the framework collapsed. Considering the length of rafter, it is seen to divide conveniently into three lengths of twenty-eight feet each, on each side of the ridge. As it is desired to use as few posts as possible, suppose it is decided to put in a post at every twenty-eight feet section and carry the intervening space by truss work of the form shown in the sketch reproduced herewith. The load that each truss is to carry, in order to be strong enough to support the glass under its breaking load, is found by taking the area of roof supported by this truss and multiplying this by the weight per square foot that the glass will bear; that is, thirty pounds. Now, this is the breaking load of the glass that the truss would be called on to bear, but it would be safe to take the working load as one-fourth of this, or seven and one-half pounds per foot. This even would be a high working weight, as ordinarily the truss has only to carry the weight of the glass, which is less than two pounds per foot. Adding two and one-half pounds per square foot to cover the weight of the glass and bars we have ten pounds per square foot as the total working load for the truss. Supposing the posts are spaced eight feet four inches apart lengthwise of the house, then each truss has to carry a total working load of 2,333 pounds.

This loading may be considered as being distributed at the joints and the ends of the truss. The stress or strains produced in the members of the truss can now be determined by means of the device known as the stress or strain diagram. After finding in this way the strain in each member of the truss, calculations must be made to obtain the correct size for each. For instance, if the sash bar is of cypress, then it must be heavy enough to stand a working end strain of the 3,200 pounds. In the case under discussion it has been calculated that this bar must be 1⅞x2½, this size giving a working end strain of 3,200 pounds and a breaking strain of 12,800 pounds. The lower member, which must carry 3,000 pounds, is in tension, so should be of iron or steel and by a separate calculation it is found that ⅝-inch diameter is suitable for this strain. The other members of the truss are proportioned in the same way.

Having now designed the truss to carry the roof it is necessary to design the posts or columns to carry the truss. The strength of a column depends greatly on its length, so by properly bracing a long slender column it is practically divided by the bracing into a corresponding number of short columns. In the wide house under consideration it is found that 2-inch pipe properly braced in every direction will carry the roof.

The design is now complete, leaving the glass the weakest member, as it should be, for it is seen that although the breaking strength of the glass is thirty pounds per square foot, and the breaking strength of the truss work is the same, yet the glass is not uniform in strength, whereas the trusses are, and as thirty pounds is an average, it follows that half the glass would be broken by the time this load would be reached and if half the glass is broken, half the weight has gone with it, so our framework stands to be subjected in the limit to only one-half of its breaking load.

There is a good deal of theory about all of this, but many of those here now will likely be at the S. A. F. convention at Philadelphia in August and there will then be an opportunity to see how it has all worked out.



AUGUSTA, GA.—Public sentiment here is growing in favor of clearing the trees of mistletoe, as it is claimed it threatens the life of the trees.

OILED CLOTH FOR PROTECTION.

Will you please give me directions for preparing cotton cloth, with boiled oil and rosin, for covering frames? It is so warm here, Miami, Fla., that we do not need glass protection, but build our houses with lattice for protection against wind storms. I think the oiled cloth will keep out the too hot rays of the sun. J. W. W.

I can see no reason why cloth could not be used to advantage for this purpose, particularly as far south as Miami, Fla. Would suggest raw, rather than boiled oil, as the latter stains the cloth and thus impedes the light. As light is so essential to plant life, it is important such covering be made as transparent as possible. The following furmula is generally used in preparing cloth for this purpose: Six pints of raw oil, two ounces of sugar of lead, eight ounces of white rosin. This preparation is applied hot with a brush and for this reason should be prepared in a kettle or other receptacle that will withstand heat.

Sugar of lead does not mix readily and I would use only enough oil at first to cover it. Agitate with a stick or grind with a pestle until the emulsion is perfect, then add the balance of the oil and rosin. Stir well on a slow fire until all the ingredients are incorporated.

Truss Roofed House 150 Feet Wide to be Built by the King Construction Co.

Cloth thus treated in a short time becomes hard and in a year or so very brittle, being easily torn. It is not improbable that this formula could be improved upon by adding paraffin or beeswax to increase or prolong pliability. A little experimenting often proves good and one season's use would demonstrate the best formula. ELMER D. SMITH.

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.

The regular meeting of the Dobbs Ferry Horticultural Association was held in Odd Fellows' hall Saturday evening, January 26, Vice-President Robert Boreham in the chair. There was a prize for the best pot plant in not larger than a 6-inch pot, which was awarded to J. Bradley, gardener to H. Sedenberg, for a cyclamen. H. Kastberg, gardener to Miss Masters, was second with a cineraria. H. Keiling, gardener to Mr. McComb, staged some roses which were remarkable after the bad season we have had. Among them were La France, Bride, Bridesmaid, Golden Gate, Perle and Ivory. There is a prize for the best exhibit of any kind to be competed for at the next regular meeting. J. Bradley will give a short talk on the growing of cyclamens.

WINDSOR, ONT.—C. R. Tuson has purchased the building now occupied by his business.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society had a full meeting on Wednesday evening, January 23, at the Hotel Martinique, New York city. The interest manifested in the coming meeting at Washington, from various parts of the country, was most encouraging. The special prize schedule which we have to offer is greater than ever before and several more will be added to the list, the determination being to make this a very successful exhibit.

A committee was appointed to wait on President Roosevelt and invite his presence at the show as may suit his convenience.

The full schedule of the society will be issued within a very few days.

BENJAMIN HAMMOND, Sec'y.

The special prizes include $50 and $25 for fifty blooms American Beauty. The Lord & Burnham trophy, valued at $250, will be awarded in conjunction with the first (cash) prize in this class, and will become the property of the competitor winning it twice, consecutively or otherwise. It has now been won once by Waban Rose Conservatories and once by George Burton, Chestnut Hill, Pa.

For the best display of cut roses, all varieties, the Dorrance challenge cup, value $250, offered by Benj. Dorrance, the winner to hold the cup a year and on relinquishing it to the society for another competition, at the end of that period to receive a silver shield suitably engraved, as a permanent record of his having held the cup.

For fifty blooms of Golden Gate, a silver cup valued at $50, offered by Geo. H. Cooke, Washington, D. C.

For fifty blooms Wellesley, a silver cup valued at $50, offered by John H. Taylor, Bayside, L. I.

For the best exhibit of Rambler roses in pots, a silver cup valued at $50, offered by Robert Simpson, Clifton, N. J.

For fifty Mme. Chatenay, a silver cup valued at $50, offered by Traendly & Schenck, New York city.

For fifty Richmond, a silver cup valued at $25, offered by Henry F. Michell Co., Philadelphia.

For fifty Killarney, $25 in gold, offered by Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove, Pa.

For fifty Liberty, $25, offered by W. H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass.

For fifty Bridesmaid, a silver cup valued at $25, offered by S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., Philadelphia.

For the vase of roses showing the most artistic arrangement, $25, offered by Welch Bros., Boston.

For fifty Richmond, $25 in gold, offered by E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind.

For fifty of any variety of American origin not now in commerce, a silver cup valued at $25, offered by Alexander Montgomery, Natick, Mass.

For American seedling not yet introduced, a silver cup, valued at $25, offered by H. O. May, Summit, N. J.

For collection of hybrid Wichuraiana, a silver cup valued at $25, offered by Frank R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.

For twenty-five Bride, $12, offered by L. F. Coddington, Murray Hill, N. J.

For six or more of any rose never before exhibited, $10, offered by Mrs. S. C. Briggs, Washington, D. C.

For foliage rose suitable for village dooryards, $10, offered by Benjamin Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y.

For display of Ivory, $10, offered by Benjamin Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y.

For twenty-five Gen. MacArthur, $15, offered by Edward Hatch, Boston.

For the prettiest exhibit, to be decided by three ladies visiting the Washington show, $5 in gold, offered by Miss M. I. Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y.

Special prize for 100 American Beauty roses, $100 in gold, offered by A. Gude & Bro., Washington, D. C., but there must not be less than five entries for this prize.

A gold medal is offered for the best rose not yet disseminated, whether of domestic or foreign origin. Exhibits to be judged by the official scale of the American Rose Society, and no gold medal to be awarded to any rose scoring less than ninety-five points.

A silver medal is offered under the same conditions for a novelty scoring not less than eighty-five points.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society reserves to itself the right of selection of the judges who shall pass upon the exhibits in the competition for these medals.

ZANESVILLE, O.—In December A. R. Edwards opened a flower and seed store at 48 North Fourth street. He had an excellent Christmas business and has every prospect for a good spring trade.

SEEN AT TORONTO.

The show of carnation blooms at Toronto was a remarkable one for uniform high quality. The finest of the blooms may not have been any better than the best that have been shown at some previous exhibitions, but I feel safe in saying that there were less blooms shown that were below a good average exhibition quality. Any new variety that was not of Enchantress size had no show for any of the medals. Only three certificates were given. It remains to be seen whether these varieties will score as high in the growers' estimation after they are disseminated; and also whether some of those that were left at the post in this short distance race will not pull up winners in the long race that will follow their dissemination. This has happened many times in the past and those who have followed the exhibitions know better than to try to judge a variety's commercial value wholly by the show it makes on the exhibition table. You can, of course, make up your mind as to whether the color, size, form, calyx, stem and keeping qualities are desirable, but that is as far as you can go. And the wise ones will recognize the fact that there are other very important points to a paying carnation.

The variety that was there in largest quantity was Winsor. There were vases of it in every part of the hall, besides a large mirror decoration, which was made over the second day. The color of this variety is distinct and beautiful, both by day and under artificial light.

Pink Imperial was there in fine shape; it is a fine keeper.

Aristocrat is a large, round bloom and has a fine stem. The color when the bloom is young has a pleasing carmine cast which lights up beautifully by artificial light. It traveled in good shape from Joliet to Toronto.

Beacon showed up ahead of all other scarlets. The color is orange-scarlet, better than many so-called scarlets we have had. In size and general make-up it reminds one of Enchantress.

White Enchantress as shown by F. R. Pierson Co. needs no further comments than that it is what the name implies.

F. Burki showed a fine vase of his namesake, which was a surprise to many who grew it last year.

Alma Ward made perhaps the biggest show of any one vase. The blooms are of extra large size, with large, broad petals, but hardly full enough. The calyx is fine and stem extra long and strong. A very showy variety.

Mrs. C. W. Ward is a greatly improved Mrs. Lawson; larger bloom and longer stem; color about the same as Mrs. Lawson.

No. 20, by Bassett & Washburn, is a fine, large red with a good stem and calyx. The color is bright red bordering on scarlet. The bloom is of good form and deeply fringed.

Elsa, as shown by Cottage Gardens, is a beautiful thing. The color is more salmon than in Lawson and lights up beautifully at night. Fine, round form and good size. A little short in stem as compared with others.

Red Riding Hood did not show up to my expectations. I have heard it praised very highly.

Marchioness, shown by L. E. Marquisee, traveled poorly and failed to revive sufficiently to show its merits.

Helen Gould is a beautiful striped sport of Enchantress and, like Imperial, should prove valuable for some kinds of work.

Excelsior, shown by the Dale Estate, looks like a rose-pink sport from Enchantress. If it is such, it is the brightest colored one I have yet seen.

No. 348, by Dailledouze Bros., is a fine, large bloom of Lawson shade.

There were a few bunches of Lady Bountiful, and for general excellence this variety is hard to beat. But White Perfection was great.

Red Lawson stands no show alongside the newer scarlets on account of its dull color. Flamingo was outclassed. Victory holds its lead. It always travels well. Craig was good.

Toreador won a certificate of merit. It is a decided improvement on Prosperity. The bloom is fuller, the calyx is better and the stem holds the bloom upright.

Harvard, by J. D. Cockcroft, is a greatly improved Harlowarden, much larger in size and better color; a fine keeper.

Margaret, shown by the E. G. Hill Co., is a beautiful dark pink color, fine stem and calyx, but hardly large enough.

No. 32, by J. Reimels, was one of the three that were certificated. It is a scarlet of brilliant shade, has large size, a fine stem and calyx; a well formed flower that is deeply fringed.

Bay State is a fine variegated, on a 30-inch stem. It was certificated.

Afterglow, shown by William Nicholson, showed up fine. This variety has always struck my fancy.

There were a dozen other good things, and several exhibits failed to arrive in time because of bad weather. To do full justice to all I would have to mention every vase in the show.

The E. G. Hill Co. showed a fine bunch of the new rose, Rhea Reid. This is entirely distinct and is making a hit wherever it is shown.

One novelty that took my eye was the pliers and clips for mending split carnation calyxes. There has never been a practical method for preventing splitting among carnations and something of this kind has been sadly needed.

A. F. J. BAUR.

EARLY PLANTING.

I will be glad if you will give me your opinion of the following: I am thinking of planting my greenhouse 33x80, solid beds, with one variety of carnation, and that the Enchantress. I have to depend on shipping about all I grow, and thought that variety would be the most profitable to plant. I expect to plant right in the house, along in May. Would I make a mistake in this plan? The above would be all I plant. In planting in the house early would you make the soil rich? Now, if I would add any other color, would I plant one variety of red and one of white? Suggest the best. M. W. W.

Your plan of planting your carnation plants in the house in May ought to work well, and Enchantress will pay you about as well as any variety you could grow, if you plant only one variety. The color is popular at present and that variety will produce high-grade blooms. You will find that inasmuch as your carnation cut will not be large you will have to turn out a superior grade in order to dispose of them to advantage.

I would suggest that you add a white variety, which could be White Perfection or Lady Bountiful. Either one will prove profitable. In red I would suggest Victory. Make the soil just about as rich as you would for fall planting. Later on you can mulch and feed as much as the plants will stand, and the results will be better. Set your plants 10x12 inches. This will seem a little far apart to you at first, but they will take up the room later on, when the light is the weakest and when crowding will do the most harm. Plant only good plants so that there will be as little loss as possible during the summer.

A. F. J. B.

CARNATIONS BURSTING.

I have a bench of Flora Hill and Queen Louise carnations that burst badly, not only a few, but every bloom. I have kept them a little dry, giving all ventilation possible and have not fed them in any way. Temperature from 50 to 55 degrees. They were planted October 1 in rotted pasture land sod, sandy loam with one-quarter well rotted cow manure added. They burst from the start. What can I do to overcome it? Enchantress and Boston Market, in the same house, do not burst. We have had over two months of cloudy weather.

E. H. O.

Flora Hill and Queen Louise naturally burst to some extent during the winter, even when handled with great care; and you may be sure that when they are planted as late as you did yours and subjected to such unfavorable weather as you have had they will do little else. There is no remedy that will give you immediate relief. You must wait until toward spring, when the days are longer and brighter; then it will disappear. If you had planted them six weeks earlier you would not be having so much trouble. But why grow these old, inferior varieties when there are such varieties as Lady Bountiful, Vesper, White Perfection, White Enchantress and The Queen to be had? Any of these will make you more money with far less worry. Keep your stock up to date; it will pay you. A. F. J. B.

NEW ORLEANS.

The Approaching Convention.

The Society of Southern Florists met January 25. Almost the last arrangements were made for the first convention, which will take place in New Orleans February 14 to 16. The program will be as follows:

FIRST DAY, 10:30 A. M.

Address by the mayor of the city.
Reply by Prof. Stubbs, of the experimental station.
President's address. Discussion on address.
Question box.
A paper, "Chrysanthemum Growing Under Glass in the South," by F. P. Davis, Mobile, Ala.

EVENING SESSION, 7:30 P. M.

Selection of next meeting place.
Nomination of officers.
A paper, "Best Orchids for Cut Flowers to Grow in the South," by Jas. Newsham, New Orleans.
Reception of president.

SECOND DAY.

Unfinished business.
Discussion on ways and means for the advancement of horticulture in the south.
A paper, "Packing and Express Rates," by C. W. Eichling, New Orleans.
A paper, "Roses Under Glass in the South," by Robert Lockerbie, New Orleans.
Question box.

EVENING SESSION.

Question box.
Balloting of officers.
A paper, "What the South Can Grow to Advantage for the Northern Markets," by C. W. Withers, New Orleans.
A paper, "Insects Injurious to Plants, and Remedies," with illustrations, by Prof. Newel.

THIRD DAY.

Question box.
A paper, "Carnations Under Glass in the South," by F. B. Patterson, Montgomery, Ala.
A paper, "Needs of the Retail Trade in the South," by Charles Eble, New Orleans.
A paper, "Elements of Horticulture in Private Schools," by E. Baker, New Orleans.

The meeting place will be in a central location on Canal street. Part of the hall has been taken already by our city florists and from the applications received from outsiders we are assured that in the trades' display the south and the north will be well represented. The New Orleans Horticultural Society, wishing to give a hand and a good send-off to the new organization, has voted a handsome sum for the entertainment of the guests and this, added to the subscription among the members of the Society of Southern Florists, will furnish ample means to give the visitors a grand reception.

The society's initiation fee is $1, to be sent to Joseph Steckler, of the Steckler Seed Co., New Orleans. Every florist in the south should join this society, which will become strong in the near future. Application for space must be sent to E. Baker, 2263 Carondelet street, New Orleans. Any information about rooms, hotel, railroad fare, will be cheerfully given by M. M. de Lapouyade, 4416 Bienville avenue, chairman of reception committee.

Various Notes.

Owing to a mild winter, business seems to open sooner than usual. The markets are better every week. Many flowers will be needed for the next two or three weeks, for balls and decorations, and no doubt outside stock will help, and whatever deficiency there is we will have to supply from the north.

Jas. Newsham is expecting his first consignment of orchids from Central America.

George Thomas has been successful with an early crop of sweet peas.

M. Cook & Son make a specialty of sweet olives, which they grow in large quantity from layers.

Robert Lockerbie, formerly with the Metairie Ridge Nursery Co., has started on his own account at 4161 Herville street. M. M. L.

TWO RIVERS, WIS. — Louis Hartung, who was burned out a few months ago, has rebuilt his greenhouses with enlarged capacity.

MUSKEGON, MICH.—L. Wasserman is adding two more houses to the large area already under glass. He also has built a large barn and stable.

JEANNETTE, PA.—Ernest Zanarini has gone into partnership with Ph. Govaert and the firm name will hereafter be Govaert & Co., landscape architects.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—Thomas Peaker has completed a greenhouse 11x90 and is using it to start vegetable plants. He plans to put up more glass shortly.

THE WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW

is printed Wednesday evening and mailed early Thursday morning. It is earnestly requested that all advertisers and correspondents mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday or Tuesday morning at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

THE greenhouse 150 feet wide referred to in the paper of R. O. King, read before the American Carnation Society and published in this issue of the REVIEW, is to be built by the Florex Gardens Co., North Wales, Pa. It is to be 425 feet long.

GENIUS has been defined as the faculty of doing small things well. It is just that genius that makes for success in growing either cut flowers or pot plants.

THE REVIEW would like to hear from some young man at Washington, D. C., who meets the trade and would like to act as the REVIEW'S correspondent there.

THE SAME TO ALL.

Enclosed I hand you a money order to renew my subscription to the REVIEW. The advertisement last issue brought me the stock I have wanted to get for quite a while. It shows that a classified advertisement in the REVIEW is sure to bring results. I find you are about the fairest people that I have ever dealt with and if at any time I should have a surplus, or if I needed any stock not advertised, you will hear from me with another advertisement.

ADVERTISING AND READERS.

The following from a speech by H. R. Clissold, of the Bakers' Helper, delivered before a congressional body considering change in postal laws, is particularly illustrative of the attitude of the florist to the advertising in his trade paper:

"The trade paper differs radically, also, from the newspaper and the magazine in the fact that to its readers the advertisements in its pages are a vital feature. The advertisements in the trade paper are to its readers the very marrow of their business. Not only would no subscriber to them desire their elimination, but most of them would seriously complain of the lessened value of the periodical if they were absent."

CARNATION DAY.

Carnation day has come and gone, and with it something learned that may be to our advantage.

We must wake up! Here is an Eldorado for us—another floral holiday born but a few years.

It is noticeable that the press has commented on it more than ever this year.

When the press takes hold of anything the people will take hold.

Americans will not let this spark of patriotism die out—it will grow and each year will find a greater demand for flowers.

The colors mostly sought were deep pink and red—they went fast—one or two at a time, but in the aggregate many.

There are many ways you can awaken an interest in this day.

A few days previous get a large picture of McKinley, drape it and put it in your window, with a few vases of carnations. Have plenty of reminders inside and outside of your store—get your home paper to write up the occasion—put a carnation on your own coat, and you won't have to wait for customers.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Cleaning Greenhouse Glass.

I wish to tell J. P. H. how I clean my greenhouse glass. My glass is the worst I have ever seen and I use muriatic acid. I would advise J. P. H. to use the raw acid the first time and afterwards use water and acid. Use one cup of acid to two cups of water, and if that is too strong use your own judgment; you will soon get on to it.

Two 10-foot boards with steps nailed on for a 16-foot board to rest on will support two men while working on the roof. Do not wet the glass the first time and do not let the acid dry on the glass, but wash it off. Work both ends so that one end will be dry all the time. I have tried almost every way, but I find this way the best. Two men can clean 2,000 feet of glass per day.

[The Dahlia Manual, a treatise on dahlia culture, by W. W. Wilmore, Denver, Colo.; price, 35 cents.]

One of the most attractively printed of the many cultural monographs now coming from the press is that of W. W. Wilmore, who states in his preface that he has devoted twenty-five years of his life to a study of the dahlia. In the sixteen illustrated pages of his pamphlet, Mr. Wilmore aims to present such information as is commonly called for by those who are seeking to make a success of the dahlia as a garden flower. He does not seek to cover the subject in the most minute detail, but to set forth the needs of the dahlia in an easily understandable style. He devotes a chapter to soil and location, another to fertilizers, one to planting and watering and the other details of culture. A couple of pages are given to propagation, one to insect pests and a paragraph to storage of roots. The suggestions as to the varieties to plant are brief. Incidentally he says: "As a rule I think the purchaser, unless he is familiar with varieties, will do well to leave the selection to some responsible grower or dealer, simply stating the colors and types wanted, together with the purpose for which they are to be grown." The booklet is in no sense an advertising catalogue and will be read with interest by everyone who grows the dahlia.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

A few days of genuine winter weather have done something to improve the quality of stock but little toward increasing the quantity, for most of the time it has been cloudy. There are now liberal supplies of carnations and it is usually possible to fill all orders unless received at such a late hour that just the grade or color wanted have been sold. McKinley day, January 29, did not make even a ripple on the surface. The demand continues to be principally for white, but red is first cleaned up because in lightest supply. Prices, in the face of increased receipts, have made a slight advance in the days when demand showed itself strongest. The market has been erratic, some days brisk, and some days dull.

If the dark weather continues much longer we shall be wholly without roses. Receipts are steadily on the down grade. The only limit to prices is the point beyond which retailers can no longer use the stock; in fact, many of them say they are not now able to make a profit on roses, the price on shorts being above where they can use them to advantage for funeral work. Best Bride and Maid occasionally sell for $20 per hundred, and Killarney and Richmond still bring $25 per hundred for the small proportion of extra fancy stock received. Of course the bulk are in the class bringing from $8 to $15. Chatenay is not much in evidence.

There are liberal receipts of violets and they sell none too well. Bulbous stock is more abundant. There are large quantities of white tulips and yellow is received in much larger numbers. Red and other sorts are steadily gaining in volume. Paper Whites and Romans are not so plentiful as they were and are bringing a shade better prices. Easter lilies are scarce, and callas frequently are hard to find. Daffodils sell well and freesia usually moves quickly. A few poet's narcissi have arrived. The better class of stores are handling mignonette quite freely, but only the best will do. Sweet peas clean up within the hour received.

Green goods are in light supply. There is a shortage of bunches of plumosus and Sprengeri. Adiantum, too, is scarce and advancing in price. The strings of smilax are short and light and one frequently has to skirmish to find strings of asparagus. There is plenty of cold storage wild smilax and it is selling well.

Winandy Sale.

The trustees in bankruptcy having in charge the assets of Michael Winandy have secured an order looking to the sale of all the personal property of the bankrupt and his interest in the real estate. Bids are to be received up to 10 a. m. Wednesday, February 6, at which hour they are to be presented before Sidney C. Eastman, referee in bankruptcy. The trustees are Peter Reinberg, Carl Ickes and Peter Kransz.

Retailers' Association.

The Retail Florists' Association held its annual meeting at Handel hall January 24. The following officers were elected: President, George Walther; vice-president, George Asmus; secretary, A. Lange; treasurer, C. H. Fisk.

The association has been resting on its oars the last few months. President Walther proposes to have the matter of credits taken up. There is no doubt that every retailer is carrying more money on his books than good business would justify, and the same may be said of the gentlemen from whom the retailers buy.

The Lily Prospects.

W. L. Palinsky ventures the opinion that lilies will not be especially abundant for Easter. Because of the early date the stock cannot waste time or it will not be ready. Then, too, much disease has developed. He took 5,000 longiflorum multiflorum from three sources. Each lot is about like the others and the loss is twenty-five to thirty per cent. Mr. Palinsky says Sam Pearce told him his own loss would be close to forty per cent.

The Best Carnations.

August Poehlmann says that of all the new sorts seen at Toronto, Beacon looks best to him, although he will not go back on Victory, which he says is by all odds the best money maker of any red the Poehlmann Bros. Co. ever has grown. One of its best attributes is its shipping quality. He says seeing Winsor as shown at Toronto has proved to him that he was right when he bought 10,000 of this variety. Half of this number will be grown this year, the other half being turned over to the Thomson Carnation Co., of Joliet. Winsor looks a splendid shipper, and a carnation that doesn't ship is no good in the Chicago market.

has improved under the influence of a few days of real winter weather. Stock now leaves little to be desired, except that larger cuts would be welcome. While we have the finest Roses, Beauties, Carnations, etc., the market affords, we also have enough short and medium grades for those who want them.

No order too large for us to handle and none too small to receive careful attention. We have an eye to the future. Write, Wire or Phone—Today.

Carnation Show.

Secretary Schupp, of the Florists' Club, is sending out notices to the local people to prepare for the Florists' Club carnation exhibition February 14. He also is writing the originators of novelties, etc., requesting exhibits. It is expected a large attendance will be on hand that night, for much interest is taken in the new carnations and in seeing what the local growers can show well done.

Anyone having good stock is invited to show a few flowers. If he cannot bring them personally, they may be shipped in care of E. F. Winterson, 45 Wabash avenue, who has charge of the arrangements for staging the exhibits.

Various Notes.

At the old John Brod place, at Niles Center, now owned by Albert Lies, D. J. Murphy is turning out some splendid roses. These are the narrow, short-span houses which have not been considered as specially good for rose culture. It is only another evidence that it is not so much the powder as the man behind the gun.

N. C. Moore & Co. have in contemplation plans looking to the rebuilding of their older range of houses in the spring.

It is reported from Moline that Henry Klehm, of Arlington Heights, is thinking of opening a retail store in a vacant room next the opera house there.

To show the importance of Valentine's day, A. L. Randall states that last year his firm sold 160,000 violets that day. Prices were weak a year ago, but he says he expects to handle a larger number of violets this year than last.

Emil Buettner says he never has seen anything like the way white lilac has been called for this year. His first batch was cleaned out much sooner than expected and brought excellent prices.

Bassett & Washburn made a splendid showing with their seedling No. 20 at the carnation convention last week, winning the S. A. F. bronze medal in the face of the closest competition ever known in this class. There were fifteen entries. No. 20 is a seedling of Prosperity and Crane which they have been growing since 1902. They now have 1,200 plants. They contemplate sending the variety out in 1908.

Peter Reinberg has been forcing valley only a few weeks, but few old hands at it can produce better stock than he has this week.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. moved into its new store on the second floor of the Atlas block the first days of this week. As soon as they can get things painted they will be finely located.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is taking inventory this week preparatory to making a number of changes in the method of handling the business. They will separate the several departments. E. F. Winterson will give his personal attention to the cut flowers. L. H. Winterson will manage the supply department and John Degnan have charge of the office.

One of the week's visitors was Mr. Miller, foreman for E. H. R. Green, Dallas, Tex., where they are doing tall stunts in the building line.

At J. A. Budlong's, Nelson Fisher is considered the best dark pink carnation and Boston Market the best white. This year they will try Winsor and Aristocrat as rival pinks and White Perfection for fancy white.

E. H. Hunt is receiving some Marie Louise violets grown in Michigan which bring better prices than the finest of Hudson river stock. They have not only size and color but fragrance.

Sinner Bros. have invested in practically all the new varieties of carnations for trial next season.

O. P. Bassett and Mrs. Bassett leave next Monday for New York and February 7 will sail on the Arabic for Egypt and the Nile. Returning they will spend some weeks in Europe, reaching Chicago about June 1.

Vaughan & Sperry say they have enjoyed an excellent fortnight's business, showing a splendid increase as compared with a year ago.

The appointment of Charles L. Hutchinson to membership in the South parks board of commissioners secures to the public the services of a keen business man whose interest in horticulture is well known.

Peter Reinberg and Matt Evert are busy booming Harrison for mayor.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business last week was considered good. The only trouble was the shortage of roses. During the week a number of swell weddings, dinners and other entertainments used up considerable stock. Funeral work, too, had a big call. The counter trade with the downtown florists was reported good, also prices. Quite an improvement is noted in this line since the first of the year at the wholesale houses. During the last week we found carnations in good supply and the big demand cleaned up this stock each day.

The rose market was stiff. The shortage seems general in all grades. Anything that looks good brings $8 per hundred, with extra fancy up to $15 per hundred. Violets have shortened again, owing to the cloudy weather; 50 cents per hundred is asked. Nothing but Californias in this market.

Bulbous stock is quite plentiful, but the demand is good owing to plenty of funeral work. Romans and Paper Whites are of fine quality. Callas move well, also freesia and lily of the valley. A lot of short-stemmed tulips are coming in. In greens, a lot of bronze galax was sold last week. Smilax is plentiful, also Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri. Common ferns are up to $2 per thousand.

Various Notes.

At Henry Niemeyer's place all hands were busy cleaning tuberose bulbs. All stock is looking fine.

A. G. Ahner, Sr., and A. G. Ahner, Jr., have their places in tip-top condition. Extra fine Enchantress carnations and violets were seen there.

Frank Vennemann, at Kirkwood, has quite an attraction in his potting shed in the shape of a picture gallery. He is long on fancy carnations and violets.

Hugo Gross has a fine place, filled mostly with California violets and carnations. Mr. Gross will build several new houses this summer.

Albert Scheidegger has a fine lot of Rose-pink Enchantress, for which demand is good.

A. Jablonsky has, at his Wellston place, a fine lot of longiflorum lilies in pans and pots which will be in for Easter.

Henry Emunds and E. W. Guy, of Belleville, were over last week buying supplies. Both report an excellent trade since the first of the year.

Fred Foster had a fire recently at his residence. The damage is fully covered by insurance.

Dr. A. S. Halstead, of Belleville, attended the carnation meeting at Toronto and is much pleased with the new varieties he saw.

It has been reported that James Arata, who is with C. Young & Sons Co., will desert the ancient order of bachelors soon and become a benedict. Here are congratulations to the young lady.

The showhouses of George Waldbart and Mrs. Ayers, on Grand avenue, were attractive last week with blooming stock of all kinds.

The Florists' Club meeting, which will be held Thursday afternoon, February 14, will be of great importance to growers of carnations. It will be our annual carnation meeting and all the new introductions will be on exhibition. Everybody is invited to meet with us, regardless of membership. A neat invitation will be sent out by the trustees this week. President Irish and all the officers are making great efforts to bring out the full membership on this occasion. A number of visitors from out of the city are expected to be in attendance.

VALLEY IN POTS.

Will you kindly tell me at what time I should bring in valley pips to have them in bloom for Easter in a night temperature of about 50 degrees, planted in pots with soil?

W. J. T.

If the lily of the valley is needed for Easter, 1907, it must be potted without delay, as the great festival comes at an unusually early date, viz., March 31. It makes no difference whether the pips are potted in sand, moss or loam, as no roots are made while they are being forced. If placed in the light forthwith the plants at this early date will start very slowly and the stems are bound to be short. Can you not find some place in your house where you can box in a little place and keep it up to 65 or 70 degrees? If over the hot-water pipes it will answer all right. Plunge the pots in moss or any other plunging material, cover over with boards or heavy paper and keep dark until the stems are well up; then gradually expose to the light.

We seem likely to have a rather severe winter. February is usually cold, with much sunless weather, and while the sun is at a considerably higher angle in March, we cannot depend too much on that month. Start the pips at once in as warm and dark a place as is at command, keep them well watered and they should be in season for Easter.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The increase in the quantity of spring flowers is the feature of the market this week. Freesias are more plentiful, the finer grades having arrived in quantity. Pink tulips can now be had, in addition to yellow and white. Daffodils are rather less plentiful, but there are a few good Golden Spurs. The bright, cold weather is putting more life into the roses and carnations, but there is no particular increase in the quantity. The demand is especially for pink and white, with the supply far below the requirements. Beauties have advanced, the specials bringing higher prices than at any time since Christmas. There are few medium grades, but shorts are fairly plentiful, the average quality being poor. Violets are selling better than for some time past. Prices are low for midwinter. A comparison with last season shows that ordinary grades of carnations are bringing from 50 cents to $1 per hundred more now than then, but the supply is far below what we generally have in the end of January. Cattleyas are quite plentiful and of fine quality. Gardenias are selling well, but the supply has fallen off a little. A novelty is Acacia pubescens. Mignonette is fine.

Edward Towill, of Roslyn.

Everybody knows Edward Towill, of Roslyn, and will rejoice with me in the prosperity which is so evidently his this season. The street believes that this prosperity is due, first, to his acumen, or shall we say nerve, in taking up Richmond before the plain, everyday growers thought of it, and carefully distributing his stock among them. Next, to his foresight in selecting a certain rose which every one said had been unloaded on him, and growing it so well that one of our best buyers took his entire clip during the winter months. The street even believes that the mighty Farenwald will grow two houses of this same rose, Towill stock, next season. The street further asserts that whereas any ordinary carnation grower, like Ward or Dailledouze, has to grow a thousand or more seedling carnations selected from the best plants in two or three houses before he can get anything worth seeing, Edward Towill simply picks out a few plants and grows them, nobody knows where, in a corner of one of his houses, probably, then cross fertilizes one or two flowers, and, presto! he has a seedling which a discriminating judge decides is worth so many pennies per plant and orders everything that can be produced. Should you meet Edward Towill, of Roslyn, and chance to tell him that he looks prosperous, he will assure you, artlessly, that any man may look so who lives near home, where he can run for a bite of lunch whenever he so pleases.

A Letter from Brooklyn.

John Scott, of Brooklyn, states in a letter to Phil that the quotation ascribed to him regarding Nephrolepis Amerpohlii published in this column January 10, "It is the best one yet," is too sweeping. Mr. Scott thinks Nephrolepis Amerpohlii a beautiful thing, but he does not wish to be understood to say that it will outsell Nephrolepis Scottii or displace Nephrolepis Whitmani until he has become more familiar with the promising newcomer.

Riverton.

George A. Strohlein, major general in command of the Dreer army at Riverton during the brief absence of J. D. Eisele, pointed with pride to the fine color of the kentias. They do not by any means grow kentias to the exclusion of the other palms, but there are enough kentias alone to fill a medium sized place. The larger sizes, so prominent in the fall, were reduced in numbers, suggesting the thought that they would not last beyond Easter. The medium and smaller sizes are very fine. The novelty in palms, if that term is permissible in a commercial sense, is Phoenix Roebelenii, which five years ago was so scarce and expensive as to be almost unknown. It is now here in moderate numbers. This palm is extremely graceful, with all the durability of its family. It is seen in from 5-inch to 7-inch pots and is worthy of careful inspection.

One of the gems of the collection is a block of Cocos Weddelliana in 3-inch pots reserved for offering next fall in 4-inch or 5-inch pots. The plants are perfectly developed, with the bloom of perfect health. Do not misunderstand me and cry: "What a liar!" I did not say the cocos were blooming in threes, but there is no word better than "bloom" describes that gloss or finish on the foliage that delights the heart of a grower. There were many other fine lots of C. Weddelliana, all bearing evidence that it is worth while to sow the seed of this deep-rooting palm in individual pots with a checkvalve in the bottom of each.

There is always a struggle going on in every place between the growers, who want the best plants of a small size reserved for growing on, and the order pickers, who want the best for the orders they are filling. The interest of the place one would naturally suppose would require that the cream of the stock be reserved for the specimens, yet as a matter of fact it is rarely so, the case of the cocos being an exception. I hope some day it may be the rule.

The dahlia roots are an interesting sight. Tall bins arranged in rows, each bin labeled with the name of the variety, on the front of each row a list of the varieties to be found in that row, the whole reminding one strongly of a well arranged public library. The room is frost proof. The dahlia is one of these happy neutral grounds in which grower and order picker can meet in harmony. 'Cause why? The little bulbs do just as well for propagating. PHIL.

Various Notes.

The S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. has a novelty this week in Acacia pubescens. These graceful yellow blossoms are much prized for table decorations. White violets, another specialty of this company, are especially fine just now.

Fred Brown, who has for the last two years been manager of the Bellevue-Stratford store of J. J. Habermehl's Sons, left January 23, to take charge of the store of J. H. Dunlop, Toronto, Canada. Mr. Brown was very successful while in this city. He had the courage to attempt new and striking arrangements, many of which made a decided hit. He will be greatly missed.

Mrs. R. E. Moir, of Brockton, Mass., was a visitor in this city recently.

The Leo Niessen Co. has been receiving some superb freesias from L. R. Hancock, of Burlington, N. J.

Charles E. Meehan, George L. Pennock and Alfred Burton visited the rose and carnation establishments at Briar Cliff and Scarborough recently.

Henry F. Michell has returned from Florida.

Victor Groshens has purchased a farm adjoining that of Edward Towill, at Roslyn, Pa.

A. Harvey & Sons, of Brandywine Summit, are sending exceptionally fine mignonette to the Leo Niessen Co.

S. A. Anderson and Mrs. Anderson, of Buffalo, N. Y., were visitors in this city last week.

Samuel S. Pennock, Edward A. Stroud, William P. Craig, George Chandler, William Swan, Thomas Beattie, Paul Berkowitz and a member of the firm of A. Answers to Correspondents.

Review readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia, to Phil, in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

60. Will a fine quality of sweet peas in the very best varieties have any market in your city during the summer months?

A. There is an excellent demand at remunerative prices during the first three weeks in June. After that the demand, excepting for white, is irregular. Good flowers would probably bring from $2 to $2.50 a thousand; at times more. From this, commission and expressage must be deducted.

61. I am planning to grow two acres of asters. Can you give me any suggestions about shipping and marketing these and the sweet peas?

A. Asters are much more likely to be profitable here than sweet peas during the summer months. At the distance you name from this market I would suggest arranging with the express company that the boxes go straight through in the shortest possible time; that your boxes be light and strong; the flowers carefully bunched; firmly packed, not squeezed, and picked with the sole object of having them in perfect condition when they reach the market. PHIL.

BOSTON.

The Market.

We have experienced severe weather during the last week. Boston recorded as low as 7 degrees below zero, while readings 25 and 30 degrees below were quite common within a radius of forty miles. For several days snow fell almost steadily and we have had little clear weather. While flowers continue scarce, the severe weather has hurt the retailers' trade severely. While there is no great oversupply, prices, except on roses, have stiffened a little. Roses are abnormally scarce and prices continue high. Even short-stemmed Brides and Maids still bring $6 to $8 per hundred. The wholesale markets are hardly receiving any roses, the leading growers not having sufficient to supply their regular customers. Some of the leading retailers are buying a large part of their supply in New York and other markets.

Carnations to a considerable extent are filling the gap caused by the scarcity of roses. Even split flowers are realizing $3 to $4 per hundred and there is a good number of these, due to the dark weather. Violets fluctuate all the way from 35 cents to $1. About 50 cents is a fair average price. Yellow daffodils sell extremely well, bringing up to $6 per hundred. Tulips also sell finely, La Reine being most in evidence. Paper Whites and Roman hyacinths never sold so well. As a rule there is a glut of these at this season; now there are not enough to go around. Callas and Easter lilies are only in moderate supply, prices remaining about the same. Lily of the valley is in good supply and meets with a good sale. Green stock remains about the same.

Pot plants are meeting with a slow sale. Some nice pans of bulbous stock, cyclamens, azaleas, primulas, marguerites, etc., are seen, but warmer weather is needed to move them.

gers and obstacles to be encountered, the methods of collecting, packing and shipping employed, were deeply interesting. Numerous questions were asked the lecturer and a rising vote of thanks passed at the close. Mr. Lager brought with him a number of large maps on which he pointed out the homes of the various orchids and the route taken to reach them.

Severe cold and the worst blizzard of the winter prevailed for the opening exhibition at Horticultural hall January 26. In spite of these adverse conditions there was a fair display of plants and flowers, the primulas being especially good. For six Primula Sinensis, William Whitman, M. Sullivan, gardener, led with a splendid lot. C. R. Talbot was second, and George M. Anderson third. For six Primula stellata, W. Whitman took both first and third prizes, Mrs. John L. Gardner, William Thatcher, gardener, being second. There was a splendid lot of Primula obconica. For six plants, W. Whitman was again first and third and Mrs. J. L. Gardner second.

For 100 double violets, H. F. Woods led with Marie Louise, N. F. Comley second and third with Marie Louise and Campbell. For 100 singles, H. F. Woods was first with Princess of Wales, N. F. Comley second and C. S. Strout third, all showing the same variety.

There was an unusually small show of carnations. C. S. Strout was first for twenty-five white with Lady Bountiful, and Daybreak pink with Enchantress, H. A. Stevens Co. being second in this class with Melody. For scarlet, C. S. Strout led with a fine vase of Robert Craig, Stevens Co. second with J. H. Manley. Stevens Co. won with crimson, showing Harry Fenn, for striped with Variegated Lawson, light pink with a pretty salmon-colored seedling, and for any other variety with another seedling. Quidnick Greenhouses received honorable mention for a seedling carnation, Victoria, similar in color to Lawson. They also showed a crimson seedling.

Mrs. J. L. Gardner showed a half dozen plants of the bright scarlet Primula stellata, Ruby Star. William Whitman had a nice specimen plant of Cattleya Trianæ. There was a nice display of winter vegetables.

Various Notes.

W. W. Rawson celebrated his sixtieth birthday by banqueting 300 of his friends at the Hotel Vendome on January 23. The guests included Governor Guild and Lieutenant Governor Draper. The speeches at the banquet were able oratorical efforts and eulogistic of Mr. Rawson. The toast-master, George J. Gould, of Malden, presented the host of the evening with a splendid hall clock with cathedral chimes, also a diamond studded Masonic charm, the gifts of his friends and guests. Mr. Rawson spoke feelingly words of thanks. During the day the employees at Arlington presented a fine set of driving harness, and the clerks in the seed store a handsome Morris chair. A feature of the banquet was the entire absence of alcoholic liquors, in accordance with Mr. Rawson's convictions.

H. M. Robinson & Co. find an increasing sale for gardenias, selling as many as 100 dozen a week. Cattleyas are also in good demand. The wholesalers have handled few of these flowers in the past. They have just received two carloads of southern smilax of fine quality.

Patrick Welch attended an executive committee meeting of the American Rose Society in New York last week, and incidentally ran out to see the Winsor carnation growing at home, which he considers a wonderful sight. His firm is doing a fine winter trade.

William E. Doyle used 10,000 lily of the valley in a wreath last week. He is still running strong on Killarney rose and finds it as ready a seller as ever.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Just at present it is wintry. There is fair sleighing in the suburbs and the sunshine ought soon to create more normal conditions for the grower, who has been sadly handicapped since the advent of the year.

There is a remarkable scarcity of roses and carnations. Orchids and valley are abundant; so are hyacinths, narcissi and lilac. Gardenias are not overabundant and violets hold steady at from $1 down, the high price only being paid for the very best.

Carnations are bringing from $3 to $10 per hundred. Brides and Maids fetch from $3 to $20, and Beauties from $6 per hundred for shorts up to $12 per dozen for the finest, the majority of long, fancy going at $9 per dozen.

Society has developed almost stagnation, and the retail demand is below the average, so the market may be said to keep on the even tenor of its way. Everything that reaches the city brings good prices, and patiently, but expectantly, the retailer bides his time.

The large shipments of roses expected about the middle of January and prophesied by the veteran originator of the Maid, have been sidetracked because of the clouds and await a more convenient season. The tide will soon rise; wait a little longer.

The Toronto Trip.

The trip of the carnationists from New York to Toronto was an enjoyable one. The entry into "the land of ice and snow" in the early morning revealed the snowy mantle, and transition from dampness, chill and grip to the dry, clear, pure zero air of the frozen north seemed to thrill the visitors with life and enthusiasm.

The jolly company lined up thus in the special: From New York, F. H. Traendly, John Young, A. J. Guttman, M. Matherton, E. Escallier, Wm. Eccles, Harry Bunyard, Peter Beuerlein and son, Henry Reimels, S. Butterfield, M. F. Tierney, Mr. and Mrs. Warburton, of Fall River; Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Taylor, of Southport; Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Dailledouze, of Brooklyn, and J. Austin Shaw. At various points we picked up Messrs. Wyland, Elverson and Fred Burki, of Pittsburg; W. G. Saltford, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Mr. Velie, of Marlboro, N.Y.; C. P. Dudley, Parkersburg, W. Va.; P. R. Quinlan, of Syracuse; Peter Crowe, A. O. Grassl and H. H. White and Roland Cloudsley, Buffalo. You can imagine the good-fellowship that prevailed. The only disappointment was the severe illness of William Scott, of Buffalo, making his attendance at the convention impossible. The esteem in which he is held and the universal desire for his recovery was especially demonstrated at the banquet when a standing toast was drunk to his recovery and his genial personality. No member of the Carnation Society is more widely Society Meetings.

Monday, February 11, the next meeting of the New York Florists' Club will be held in the Grand Opera house. The club's bowling enterprise and the home for the members, with all the other points of interest referred to in President Totty's inaugural, will be considered and many of them acted upon. Some fine exhibits of novelties in carnations are expected and anything of value in plant or flower will be welcome. The annual dinner will be held at the St. Denis hotel. As usual, the stipend will be $5, and the attendance should go over 100 with the membership the club now enjoys. The date is Saturday evening, February 23, and the committee promises something out of the ordinary in both flow of soul and feast for the inner man that ought to give value received to all who attend.

This week two horticultural societies celebrate with dinners that should draw full houses: Glen Cove on Thursday and Orange on Friday. Later on the big dinner at Poughkeepsie will close the festivities in this section for the season.

The rose convention, at Washington, in March, is already interesting the growers, and under Messrs. Simpson's and Hammond's enthusiastic management a great success is already assured.

On Thursday of this week, at the American Institute in this city, the second annual convention of the National Association of Gardeners will be held. A large attendance is looked for and the program is an interesting one to every member of the profession. President Hunter will have charge of the exercises. John Shore, of Harrison, N. Y., will speak on "The Maintenance of the Dignity of the Gardeners' Profession." James Logan, of Elberon, N. J., will discourse on "Scenical Planting." Charles Dumper, of Bay Shore, will talk on "Forcing Figs, Peaches and Nectarines." John T. Withers, of Jersey City, N. J., will speak on "Tree Surgery;" Samuel Scott, of Pride's Crossing, Mass., on "Herbaceous Plants," and J. P. Sorenson, of Stratford, on Thursday evening, will speak on "Grapes Under Glass."

majority and, with the club back of it to give it prestige and strength, there is no question as to its success. A team will be ready to beard the Philadelphia lion in his den and there is no reason why New York should stay down in the discard year after year with the splendid bowlers it already possesses. President Totty has fully recovered from the grip.

Joseph Fenrich handles 500 white violets daily from one of his Rhinebeck growers.

James Coyle, lieutenant at H. E. Froment's, fell on the icy pavement last Sunday and badly sprained his hand.

The victims of the grip are all convalescing. The colder weather has made recovery possible. A few more weeks of slush and rain and the trade might as well go out of business. We need the clear skies and zero weather of Toronto to make life worth living. Every visitor from New York was refreshed and benefited by that glorious climate.

Thomas Young, Jr., has the Vanderhoff wedding at St. Bartholomew's church and at the house on February 6. Geo. M. Geraghty promises some unique decorations. That other artistic Denverite, J. A. Valentine, will be here to look it over.

Emil Glauber and N. A. Benson, of Denver, are in town this week.

Leuly, the bicyclist florist of West Hoboken, rode to Toronto on a Pullman, the first convention he has not "biked" to in a generation. But he dreamed he was riding, Boehler says, all night, and the worn-out blankets looked like it in the morning.

Mr. McConnell, manager for L. M. Noe, is confined to his room with a severe cold and grip. This disease has become almost as fashionable as appendicitis.

The Toronto delegates from New York are all back home safe and sound with none of the evidences of Admiral Dewey's kind of a time in sight. In fact, the assertion is freely made that a quieter, happier, more peaceful excursion was never experienced by any New York conventionists since carnations were conventionized.

J. Austin Shaw.

Lowellville, O.—Ralph Erskine suffered considerable loss by wind January 21. Quite a bit of glass was broken and part of the greenhouse moved from the foundation.

FINDLAY, O.—J. J. Waaland lost about twenty-five panes of glass and some stock by frost in a recent storm.

SPRINGFIELD, O.—The Fairview Floral Co., of Beattytown, has secured the order for bedding for the lawn at the county buildings on a bid of $84.

HUTCHINSON, KAN.—John Stamm has enjoyed an increase in business of forty per cent over last season. Next summer he intends to add about 3,000 feet of glass to his plant.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

The cold weather all last week hurt business considerably. January 22 the thermometer registered 22 degrees below zero and it remained around the zero mark all the week. All that was done was on funeral work. With some this was quite heavy; but it was not enough to make up for the slow sales in cut flowers.

Stock remains high in price and will do so until our growers begin to cut something. The prospects are good, as the sun is now shining.

Some difficulty was experienced by the late arrival of trains during the week, and a few good funeral orders were lost on that account.

Good roses are difficult to obtain; consequently carnations and bulb stock have been more in demand. A good number of the early varieties of tulips and daffodils are handled, also violet sales have been quite active.

St. Paul.

William Swanson, of Haugan & Swanson, was bitten by a mad dog and some anxiety was felt as to the outcome; as the teeth did not come in direct contact with the flesh the physicians here do not anticipate any serious trouble.

E. F. Lemke has been cutting some fine single violets, which he has disposed of without the least trouble, and what he could not sell in his store were readily taken by other dealers.

Otto Hiersekorn has been favored with some large orders for funeral designs.

August S. Swanson's store in the Endicott arcade is a profusion of bulb stock which is reported to sell well.

The Seeger Floral Co. says that the demand is brisk, but it is very difficult to get the proper kind of stock.

Caller this week: Joseph Marks, representing A. L. Randall Co., Chicago.

FELIX.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business remains good. The weather has been more favorable for flowers for the last week, but not long enough to noticeably affect the market. Many orchids, valley, etc., were used for the funeral of the late Senator Alger.

Roses are almost all gone; where hundreds were formerly seen you now can nearly count them on your fingers. Carnations keep well cleaned up. The prices run from $2 to $4 per hundred for some extra fine white. Calla lilies are quite plentiful, but Harrisii are not. Some good bulbous stock is arriving daily.

Carnation Night.

The Detroit Florists' Club has made arrangements to hold a carnation exhibition Wednesday evening, February 6. Introducers of novelties are hereby requested to send same, at the club's expense, care of the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, 38 to 40 Broadway, Detroit, Michigan.

These monthly shows of the club attract all the growers in this vicinity, and anyone having any novelty should take advantage of this opportunity.

Various Notes.

Albert Pochelon was laid up for several days with a severe attack of the grip.

marked "Box Markers for the Purveyors of the Sweets of Nature."

George Browne and Alexander Common were the only Detroit delegates at Toronto. Both were well pleased with the show. Mr. Browne has promised to tell all about it at the meeting February 6.

The Board of Directors of the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange have elected officers as follows: President, Philip Breitmeyer; vice-president, William Dilger; second vice-president, Fred Breitmeyer; secretary and treasurer, Robert Rahaley.

Many going to and from Toronto passed through and stopped off at Detroit. Among them were: J. A. Valentine, N. A. Benson, Emil Glauber, Denver, Colo.; J. A. Evans, Richmond, Ind.; Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati, and the Poehlmann brothers, Chicago.

A party of western florists, mostly from the Windy City, stopped off at Detroit on the return trip from Toronto. The party made a flying trip to Mount Clemens as Fred Breitmeyer's guests.

Several of the retailers worked overtime on work for the funeral of the late Senator R. A. Alger. John Breitmeyer's Sons made an elaborate G. A. R. badge, as well as many beautiful wreaths. Schroeter's used many orchids of different varieties. Something like twenty designs, mostly wreaths, arrived from Washington, but all had suffered from frost. H. S.

Vegetable Forcing.

PLEASE send the REVIEW the names of those in your vicinity who grow vegetables under glass.

THE grower of cucumbers under glass is always ready to try a few seeds of any special strain. His purchase of the same stock in quantity for the following season naturally depends on the result.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—Cucumbers, $1.50 to $1.75 doz.; lettuce, 25c to 35c case; mushrooms, 50c to 60c lb.; hothouse tomatoes, 25c to 35c lb.; radishes, 35c to 45c doz. bunches.

BOSTON, Jan. 29.—Mushrooms, 50c to 75c lb.; rhubarb, 12½c to 15c lb.; parsley, $1 to $1.25 box; tomatoes, 25c lb.; cucumbers, $4 to $13.50 box; lettuce, 50c to 75c doz.; romaine, 75c to $1 doz; escarolle, 75c to $1 doz; radishes, $1.25 to $1.50 box. Trade is affected by the severe weather and is only moderate.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—Cucumbers of fancy quality are still scarce and would bring pretty good prices, but the market is dull for medium and ordinary qualities. Lettuce also shows irregular quality; very fancy headed stock would exceed quotations. Mushrooms steady. Other kinds quiet and unchanged. Cucumbers, fancy, $1.25 to $1.75 doz.; No. 2, 75c to $1 doz.; lettuce, 25c to $1 doz.; mushrooms, 25c to 75c lb; mint, 50c to $1 doz. bunches; radishes, $3.50 to $4 per 100 bunches; parsley, 15c doz. bunches; tomatoes, 15c to 30c lb.; rhubarb, 40c to 60c bunch.

ENGLISH FORCING STRAINS.

Watkins & Simpson, London, England, write in part as follows under date of January 12:

"We are considerably interested in a paragraph on page 433 of the issue of the REVIEW for December 27, where it is said that there is a large trade to be done in forcing strains of lettuce, etc., by one who establishes a reputation for first-class strains. We may say that we are having a crusade here in England to try and induce the English people to take up the Parisian methods of forcing vegetables. We noticed in an issue of a few weeks ago that these forcing lettuces, etc., were largely grown in the States, and we intended to have written you, but we have been so extremely busy, as usual at this time of the year, that we have not been able to. However, your little note brings the matter in front of us again.

"We may say we have some of the finest strains for this class of work that are to be obtained. The lettuces that we offer are specially adapted for either coldframe or greenhouse work, and the Early Six Weeks cauliflower is the finest cauliflower for forcing that we know of. It may be had in any time of the year six weeks after planting out. We think we may say that we supply more forcing frame cucumber seed than any other firm, as we devote ourselves specially to a market gardening trade, and seeds for market gardeners must be exceedingly good."

TOMATOES, BEANS AND BEETS.

I want to build a house 12x60 for tomatoes. Would a wall four feet high be high enough for a bench, or will the plants do better on a raised bed? Can beans and beets be grown under glass?

C. J. J.

In a house as narrow as twelve feet a wall four feet high would not be high enough for a raised bench, as it would give your plants very little head-room. The plants could, of course, be carried over on a line with the roof a foot or more away from the glass, but trained that way only two rows could be accommodated, and your house would be pretty well shaded by the foliage. A tomato plant will fruit much better with the roots confined, so that the solid or raised bed is not the most suitable place for them.

I think your best plan would be to grow them in boxes. Make these about one foot wide and nine or ten inches deep and any length you desire. They could be made continuous for the whole length of the house, or in lengths that could be easily moved around. Set the plants about fourteen inches apart in the boxes.

With a good light house four rows of plants could be grown without the one shading the other much if they were trained to upright trellises. The height of your plants would, of course, be regulated by the height of your house and they would have to be stopped before they reached the glass. The two outside rows would not have as much headroom as the two in the center of the house; but if you have an east and west house it may be best to stop them all about an even height, so that the center rows would not shade the back row. If it is a north and south house it will be all the better for your plants, as then the light will strike on both sides of the rows some part of the day and give them all an equal chance.

Beans, and I presume you mean string beans, can be successfully grown under glass; but they require a minimum temperature of 60 degrees. Probably this is where you have failed. A raised bench is best for their cultivation, one that will accommodate about five inches of soil. This should be of good quality and fairly well enriched with well decomposed manure. We have found the Mohawk variety a suitable one to grow. The most troublesome part of their cultivation is the getting of the beans up. They are apt to rot in the soil unless this is only moderately moist at planting and water is withheld until they show well above the soil. After they are well up they need quite a little water, but at no stage of their growth should the soil be kept too wet.

We plant the beans about three inches apart in rows across the bench, the rows being about twelve inches apart. After the plants are about six inches high we pull a little soil around them from either side. This encourages them to make roots around the neck of the stem, and, as the soil is highest around the plants, insures against their being too wet immediately around the stems. Some sort of support is necessary to keep the plants erect and prevent the one row from falling over on the other. For this purpose there is nothing better than light pieces of brush set along each side of the row. Light brush will give no shade and give all the support that is needed.

It is not good policy to grow beans in the same house with tomatoes, as here the white fly may prove troublesome. Grown apart from tomatoes they are not apt to attack the beans; but grown in the same house, if any are on the tomatoes, they will get from them onto the beans and prove a source of endless annoyance. The only other insect pest that is apt to put in its appearance is red spider. But if the atmosphere of the house is kept moderately moist, after the plants are well advanced in growth, there is little danger of their getting a foothold.

Beets we have never grown extensively as a greenhouse crop, as there is not enough money in them to make it profitable. They can be grown, however. A bench is the most suitable place for them, and a rather light soil the best. A night temperature of 50 degrees is high enough. They are best sown in rows and thinned out to two inches apart. Crosby's Egyptian is a good variety for the purpose, as it is one of the earliest and does not make a large top. W. S. CROYDON.

FOR THE MARKET GARDENER.

O. G. Bishop, of Pontiac, Mich., speaking on "Fifteen Minutes with a Market Gardener," before the Western New York Horticultural Society, said in part:

"The demand for quality is increasing fast. The public is becoming discriminating, and I'm glad of it. It gives the progressive grower a decided advantage over the other fellow. The critical trade is the one to cater to; they'll pay the price.

"Not long ago I was in Chicago on their market and the sloppy manner in which their vegetables were brought in was disgusting. I was really ashamed to say I was a gardener. And the prices they got were in accord with the quality of their stuff. You can't take too much pains to have your truck right. Grow the best varieties in the best way you can, and then have them look their best when ready to sell.

"Teach your dealers that you are absolutely honest with them. Don't try any tricks. If your stuff is fine, say so; if only fair, say so; if not good, don't take it; and above all things, have one price for all of them. Don't cut; if you do you will have that man thinking you cut to someone else. Don't give more than a bushel, but give that, and be regular. Don't be afraid to ask a price. Don't be cheap; that won't draw trade. If you are sure to be there with goods of the right quality you can get the price."

REPORTS in general state that the trade from the catalogues so far mailed is not up to expectations.

H. F. MICHELL, Philadelphia, has returned from Florida. All the Philadelphia seedsmen report the season opening well.

VISITED CHICAGO: E. M. Parmelee, of John H. Allan Seed Co., Sheboygan; John Bodger, of Bodger & Son, Santa Paula, Cal.

THE Burpee wholesale list, dated January 21, lists Southport White Globe onion at $2.75 per pound, or $260 per hundred pounds.

THERE is always a delay in getting sweet corn forward in proper time, but this year the delay is worse than ever. A shortage of cars has much to do with it, they say.

IN the wholesale catalogues the prices of onion and radish seed are well advanced over last year. The tendency to get values where they properly should be is a good sign.

THERE has been a brisk demand for tomato seed this season. The canners are making preparation for a banner pack in 1907. The outlook from the seedsmen's standpoint, as far as the canners' trade is concerned, seems bright at present and for another season at least.

ONION set prices are holding up stiff. January shipments are going out in first-class shape and the outlook for spring business is bright. Inquiries from all sections are arriving daily and a slight advance over a preceding quotation is stood for and orders booked accordingly.

H. E. SHAWVAN, traveling salesman for D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, met with a peculiar accident while eating his dinner at a hotel at De Kalb, Ill., the other day. While masticating a piece of chicken a bone became lodged in his throat and could not be removed without the aid of a surgeon.

THE market gardeners and other onion growers who have quantities of marketable onions started are getting anxious to know what the prospect for getting rid of them is going to be. If an advance in the price of this article should develop it would cause a hustle for seeds. The market price for onions in the spring exerts a great influence upon the amount of seed wanted for a coming year's crop.

THE seed trade is preparing to attend the coming annual convention of canners to be held at Buffalo, N. Y., the week of February 13. Each succeeding year adds to the attendance of seed trade representatives at this convention, and it is said that extra effort is being put forth to get them out this year.

ONE seedsman figured that it cost him $1.50 to make each sale by advertising his catalogue in the general magazines. At the end of the season he found the orders so obtained averaged $1.25 each.

THE following seed growers visited the Twin Cities last week: W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, Mich.; E. H. Parmelee, of the J. H. Allan Seed Co., Sturgeon Bay, Wis., and C. P. Braslan, San Jose, Cal.

MOST seedsmen count gains in January and February as so much velvet. Late in the season they nearly always have all the business that can be handled, and gains are more difficult to make.

TEXAS has a Corn Growers' Association which has done much to improve the character of seed used by its members, and following its annual meeting at Waco, January 31, a Texas Seed Growers' Asosciation is to be organized, the principal object of which is to be the improvement of cotton, but all other kinds of seeds will be within its scope.

is the photograph made when the members of the American Seed Trade Association visited Fordhook in June, 1903.

THE seed trade is being asked to start a market gardeners' journal at Louisville, Ky., by buying subscriptions in bulk. The man on the road is from the force of Wood, Stubbs & Co., and states that this firm is behind the project.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

A big firm of European seedsmen, who shall be nameless here, offers the following view of the American seed trade: "We find that as a rule the American seedsmen are strongly imbued with a desire for cheapness. It is no use offering a good article and expecting a good price for it, as the average seedsman says: 'Oh, I can get the same thing, or something with the same name, at a lower rate, and I cannot therefore pass you an order.' For our part, we do not look at things in this way.''

FREE SEEDS REINSTATED.

In connection with the discussion of the agricultural appropriation bill in the lower house of Congress January 25 there was a general debate on the committee provision appropriating $238,000 for the purchase and testing of new and uncommon seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs and vines and omitting the usual appropriation for the purchase of ordinary flower and garden seeds for distribution. Mr. Candler, of Mississippi, led the fight for free seeds, and in a long speech he charged that the item in the present bill was the work of a lobby composed of seedsmen of the country and of effective newspaper work. He said he could not go back and look his ''dear old farmer friends'' in the face after the increase of the salaries of congressmen if free seeds were not to be had.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 29.—The agricultural appropriation bill occupied the house most of the day and when the amendment concerning the free distribution of seeds was reached the members reversed a ruling of the chair by a vote of 136 to 85 and restored the paragraph as it has been the law for a number of years. This is about the same vote recorded against free seeds last year, showing lack of progress. It is now up to the senate, which is expected to concur.

"THERE'S MILLIONS IN IT."

J. J. H. Gregory is on record as saying that ''It may be doubted whether there has been a season for the past quarter of a century when the onion seed crop of the United States has been so unusually blighted. The whole country from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean appears to share in the general misfortune. The visitation has been so severe in California that that state, which has been the grand source for low-priced seed, now holds it at wholesale at a figure which will bring the retail rate fully as high as New England seed has usually borne. In the onion seed centers of New England the blight has been so severe that in one case in a field of ten acres the crop was about annihilated. The man who will discover a chemical that will protect from the attack of the fungus which produces the blight will be a benefactor of the race.''

A NEW FRENCH LETTUCE.

C. C. Morse & Co., San Francisco, say of a new lettuce, named Strawberry:

''This is a new lettuce from France which we tested in our trial grounds last season and at once discovered so much real merit in it that we decided to offer it to our friends this year through our catalogue. It is a medium-sized, tight-heading variety, and while very dark brown in general appearance, the interior of the head is decidedly pink, and when dressed and prepared for the table it resembles a dish of crushed strawberries. It is the only variety we know which is so colored, and while very attractive indeed on this account, its chief value is its delicious flavor and its buttery but crisp heart.

''There are so many varieties of lettuce in the market that it is seldom a really new one is offered, but we feel sure that the American public has not had so good a lettuce novelty as this offered for a long time, and we are very anxious that all our friends and customers should have it. We have only a limited supply and cannot offer it by the pound this year.'' spend the next year in the employ of the Shiocton Garden Land Co., for the purpose of demonstrating the uses for which a large tract of so-called marsh land is adapted. At the same time he will transfer to that place his business of growing gladiolus bulbs for the trade.

"I am going to Shiocton," said Mr. Crawford, "to see what can be done on this old marsh land. The company owning a large tract of it is dredging for drainage and purposes to next year offer a considerable number of 10-acre tracts for sale at $200 per acre. But first it is planned to obtain information as to what can be done on this soil by the employment of the most approved gardening methods. That is to be my part, and they place every facility at my disposal. This is already widely known as a cabbage growing locality. Large quantities of cucumbers also are grown and a considerable acreage of celery. Cauliflower of course goes with cabbage, but it is not yet largely grown there. The soil is six to ten feet deep, rich and black; it should be an ideal onion soil. We will try onion sets, and it is quite likely that it will prove a splendid location for this crop. At any rate it is expected to develop here the greatest market growing center in the west."

TRADE IN JAPANESE LILIES.

The Japanese lilium trade for this season is drawing to a close (by this term is meant Lilium longiflorum and its varieties, and the speciosum types). The importers, on the whole, report a satisfactory season's trade. Bulbs on an average have been more than fifty per cent higher in price than previous years, especially the longiflorum section and its varieties, and in this article this type will be mostly dealt with, as it is of the greatest value, and the only section of indispensable commercial value.

Why the price has advanced is not quite clear to the majority of growers. The cause is generally put down to a combination of exporters in Japan, and importers in Europe putting up the price, simply because they know that the article has become an indispensable article to the English florist. The Japanese grower, with his characteristic keen business instinct, and the German importer have raised the price to its present high level, and much grumbling and dissatisfaction prevails among English growers in consequence. A variety of causes have lately influenced the Japan lilium trade. Chief among these is, a shortage of supply in Japan, caused to some extent by the attention of the grower during the late war being turned to other matters, and the great prevalence of disease in the Japan cultivations; a disease which none of the growers seems to understand or cope with. Probably it is something similar to the sleeping disease to which Lilium candidum is subject.

In addition to this shortage the demand, both in England and America, has been steadily on the increase for some years. Last year the total sales in the two countries probably constituted a record. Then, again, since comparative success has attended the retarding process large quantities are annually stored in the retarding chambers, with the result that longiflorums are on the market practically all the year around, and much of this retarded business gives additional trade, and increased demand. In the process of retarding many thousands of bulbs are annually spoiled by subjecting them to an unsuitable atmospheric moisture. Unlike the retarding of lily of the valley, the retarding of liliums is a long way from being perfect.

These several causes are no doubt the reason of prices advancing. Last season £17 10s. per thousand was no uncommon figure for market sizes of longiflorums, and most European importers are quite sold out even at that high price.

One of the most unaccountable facts is that almost the entire trade is in the hands of the German importers, few English firms importing direct from Japan. Several firms have from time to time done so, but many have given up after a year or two, finding the bulbs can be had cheaper and more reliably, through some Continental importing firm. To a certain extent the importers have by mutual understanding forced up prices, and in the immediate future prices must certainly continue to increase.

Germany is a good customer with an increasing trade, an annually increasing quantity is being required in Japan for the home trade, and in addition America's importations are increasing by leaps and bounds. Lilium Harrisii from Bermuda is in more or less disfavor all over the world, for several reasons well known to the trade, and a big demand is created for longiflorums to fill the gap, and as the demand increases, so will the Japanese grower tighten his prices and become more and more independent. The florist who grows for market will become still more under the thumb of the exporter and grower in the east.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

NEWPORT.

Horticultural Society.

At a meeting of the Newport Horticultural Society, January 22, Prof. H. A. Wheeler, director of the Agricultural Experiment Station at Kingston, R. I., gave an interesting lecture on "Soda in its Relation to Plant Growth." He spoke mostly of the experiments which he had conducted and of the results which have been obtained. He spoke without notes but with a thorough knowledge from personal experience, and his address was listened to attentively by every one of the many comprising the large audience.

The speaker said, in part, that "the effect of soda on plant growth is a subject which has been considered by horticulturists for many years, and a subject upon which there have been many and diversified opinions. The Rhode Island station began its experiments in 1894.

"It was found that when as much as 300 pounds of muriate of potash was used, applications of soda-ash or common salt, in addition to potash, gave greatly increased yields in case of fodder beets. When the supply of potash was reduced, crops like turnips and radishes were greatly increased by applying the sodium compound in manure. With other plants it was found that sodium salts were of little value. It having been found that soda was beneficial in certain cases the next experiments were directed towards finding out how the benefit was obtained.

"These experiments have thrown some new light upon the question of how soda is beneficial: Chiefly that, where potash is used, the soda may not be of benefit, and again, if the potash supply is short, soda may be helpful. It has been learned that some plants can be helped by the use of soda, though there is a shortage of potash, while others cannot; and particularly it has been learned that the use of nitrate of soda and kainite, which contains large quantities of soda, is an insurance against a shortage of potash in soil where those plants are grown which are capable of being benefited by soda. There is much yet to be learned."

After his informal talk Prof. Wheeler answered several questions. Refreshments were served and the regular business of the society transacted. The ball committee made a report showing a surplus over all expenses of $107.09. The committee was continued and given

Various Notes.

Visitors this week included John S. Hay, representing Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, and F. M. Smythe.

Robert Purshall, gardener for Mrs. A. H. P. Belmont, at Marble House and Belcourt, has received the appointment of gardener at Mrs. Belmont's place, Brokalt, Long Island.

James Bond has had exceptional luck with Cattleya Trianæ this winter from plants purchased two years ago.

Arthur Griffin made a large shipment of cut flowers, melons and forced vegetables to New York about a week ago. The shipment was intended to be delivered on the morning of the day on which a large entertainment was to be given, but delivery was not effected until the day following. Several like disappointments have occurred lately.

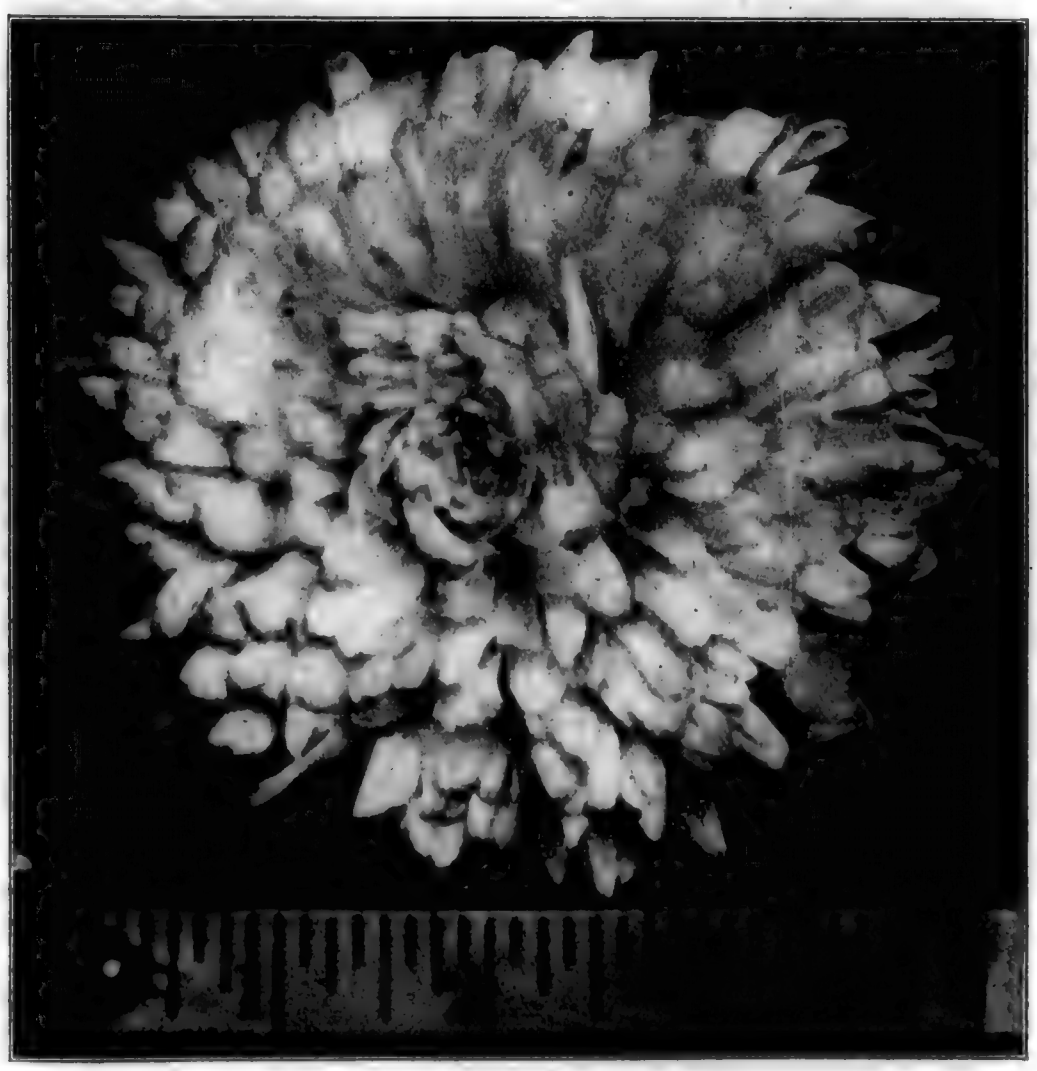
Karl Jurgens will in future give additional attention to the growing of roses for the local trade in summer, and in furtherance of that object he will devote two houses recently built to that purpose.

Oscar Schultz has been for a week or more absent from Newport on a business trip to New York, Philadelphia and other cities.

V. A. Vanicek, of the Rhode Island Nurseries, has completed the work of moving large specimen trees from distant points to the grounds of the residence of G. C. Knight, Jr., on Bellevue avenue. Many of these trees had immense balls of earth, and some of the trees were so large that arrangements had to be made whereby they were taken on to the ground through the estate adjoining. Ralph Reilly.

FOR VACANT BENCHES.

I have two greenhouses now empty. They are fourteen feet wide. A solid bed eight feet wide runs through the center. In one house I wish to plant dahlias for cut flowers. I would like some cultural advice, also to know the best varieties to plant for cut blooms. The other house is cooler; it can be kept at a night temperature of 50 degrees. What kind of seeds can I plant for pot culture for spring sales or for cut blooms in the open bed? What is the best way to force German iris? I have some heavy clumps that I wish to force for the cut blooms. D. B. C.



Dahlias have rather come into favor the last two or three years and succeed quite well under glass in a similar temperature to carnations, 50 to 54 degrees at night. No time should be lost in bringing the dahlia tubers under glass. Place in a warm house and spray twice a day until the shoots appear. The roots need not be covered at this stage. Pot roots do not require any dividing, but the larger ground roots are better separated with a sharp knife. One good shoot is sufficient for each plant. A bed eight feet wide would take three rows. Place the plants two and a half feet apart. Any good compost that will grow roses or carnations is suitable.

The single varieties flower freely under glass, but the doubles have better keeping qualities. The beautiful cactus varieties we have not had much success with. Do not allow every shoot to grow. Single stems are the best, and do not forget to stake securely when a few inches high.

A few good commercial sorts are: Doubles—A. D. Livoni, soft pink; Grand Duke Alexis, white tinted lavender; Countess of Lonsdale, salmon; Catherine Duer, crimson scarlet; Keyne's White, pure white; Mrs. Roosevelt, soft pink; Daffodil, canary yellow.

A few good pompon or bouquet dahlias which are remarkably free blooming

CARLSON'S IMPROVED ASTER SEED

Has been the best commercial variety in the Chicago market for the past three years. No disease. No yellows.

are: Iona, yellow; Mars, scarlet; White Lady and George Brinkman, pure white; Fashion, orange. In singles, Huntsman, orange scarlet; Miss L. Pryor, crimson; Snowdrop, pure white, and Sunningdale Yellow, deep yellow, are a good quartet. Try a few roots of Kriemhilde, a cactus of soft apple-blossom pink, perhaps the most popular dahlia in commerce.

Gladioli, such as Shakespeare, Snow White, Augusta and May do well benched in a temperature of 50 degrees and prove a profitable commercial crop. German iris should be lifted with as good roots as possible and planted well up to the light in the coolest end of the house. They are rather impatient of forcing, but do well in a moderately cool house. Feverfew, planted now, will make a profitable Memorial day crop.

It is a little early to start some of the seeds for spring sales. Salvia splendens need not be sown until March 1, asters and stocks about the same date. Ageratum and lobelia may be started at any time, also verbenas. Begonias of the semperflorens type may be sown, but need 60 degrees at night to start them. Petunias want similar heat and make an excellent spring plant for selling. Dianthus Heddewigi, heliotropes, Cobæa scandens and Phlox Drummondi are all good selling plants. As a rule the seeds named germinate best in a temperature of 55 to 60 degrees at night. Any of the ten weeks' stocks sown now, potted off and benched when nicely established in the pots will make a good Memorial day crop.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business during the last week has been unsettled; one day it was good and the next it was slow. Funeral work furnished the greatest demand, and there was little doing in the way of decorations. For this reason the medium and cheaper grades of flowers had the call. Still, it was a good thing that there was not a heavy demand, as the supply of flowers was not at all heavy; in fact, at most times there was scarcely anything on the market, with the exception of bulbous flowers, in the way of Romans and narcissi. This kind of stock sold cheaper than has ever been known before. Narcissi of pretty good quality could be bought at $1 to $2 per hundred, and Romans about the same. Carnations and roses held their own, and roses, if anything, showed a tendency to advance under the scarcity. Today they are selling out clean and at top prices.

Owing to the bad weather, violets have not been doing so well. Lilies are in good demand and bring good prices. Valley has been scarce. Tulips are on the market and sell fairly well, but are not creating a sensation. In the way of miscellaneous flowers, baby primroses always go well, and the same may be said of snapdragons, forget-me-nots, wall flowers and daisies.

In green goods there is a good supply all along the line. There is a large demand for galax leaves, and great quantities of them are sold in this city. Leucothoe sprays also go well.

Various Notes.

The flood which I reported in my notes last week, I am glad to say, is a thing of the past. The river is now down below the danger line and is continuing to fall fast. But still those florists whose greenhouses were flooded have lost about everything. The cold weather following the flood froze up everything that the water spared, which was not much. Several subscription lists have been going the rounds of the craft here and considerable has been subscribed, which will help greatly in restocking the houses of those who have suffered most.

Those who were fortunate enough to have attended the carnation meeting at Toronto are now safely at home, and are warm in their praise of the treatment extended to them by the Canadian florists. They report the meeting to have been one of the best the society ever has held.

A recent letter from C. P. Dietrich & Bro., of Maysville, Ky., reads as follows: "Our nursery is covered with water, but the greenhouses are above it. We go from the greenhouses to our home in a boat, but the river is falling." By this you can see that Cincinnati is not the only locality along the Ohio where there may have been damage done to the florists.

There were several visitors in town this week. Among them were: Geo. F. Struck, of Orange, N. J.; B. Eschner and Martin Reukauf, of Philadelphia, and Mr. Whitehill, of Fishkill, N. Y.

C. J. OHMER.

GREAT BEND, KAN.—W. E. Stoke has purchased the property adjoining his own, so that he now has a piece 150x200. He will build two greenhouses in the spring, each 20x80, using hot water heat.

WAYCROSS, GA.—Frank Austin, for several years with A. C. Oelschig at Savannah, has located here and will build three greenhouses. At present he has a display of stock in the windows of the local electric light company.

MANCHESTER, MASS.

The North Shore Horticultural Society held its regular meeting January 18, President McGregor in the chair and a large number present. Herman Theimann was elected an honorary member. President McGregor appointed the following committees: Essays and discussions—Messrs. Till, Mitchell and Allen; banquets—Messrs. Baker, Till, Morrison, Wetterlow, Parsons and Allen. Resolutions of sympathy on the death of Mrs. R. C. Hooper were adopted. Messrs. Jackson, Sanborn and Baker were appointed to convey the same to Mr. Hooper and daughter.

The subject for the evening was "Annuals." Herbert Shaw read a paper in which he advocated the cultivation of the old reliable varieties where garden space is limited; and in any case to proceed cautiously with the new varieties until they have proved their adaptability as regards soil, location and their use as cut flowers or their value as bedding or ornamental plants. An interesting debate followed, many of the members taking part. The subject of imported annual seeds was brought up and discussed. It was voted to continue the discussion at the next meeting, February 1.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

A CONTEST is being made against the will of the late George Ellwanger, of Rochester.

J. H. HADKINSON, now located at Benson, Neb., is doing a job of landscape work at the courthouse at Norfolk, Neb.

AT Geneva, N. Y., the nurserymen report the coldest weather, January 24, since 1897. It was 18 degrees below zero and some injury to stock is feared.

W. H. WYMAN, of the Bay State Nurseries, North Abbington, Mass., sailed for Europe January 23 to superintend the packing and shipping of large quantities of specimen evergreens, rhododendrons and other stock he is importing this season.

JOHN S. KERR, chairman of the legislative committee in charge of the Texas horticultural interests, has called a meeting of the full committee at Austin February 5, preceding the meetings of the state nut growers' organization and the State Horticultural Society. F. T. Ramsey, E. W. Kirkpatrick and F. W. Mally are among the nurserymen on the committee.

THE Xenia Star Nursery Co. will not move away from Xenia, O., as has been the intention for some time, arrangements having been made by Messrs. Gaines and McNary for the purchase of the M. C. Bailey farm, on the Dayton pike, which the company has had leased for ten years. The ten-year lease expires in a few months and as a satisfactory arrangement could not be reached for a renewal of the lease the company had decided to move. As that would be a very expensive proposition, negotiations were begun for the purchase of the farm, which consists of more than a hundred acres of the best land in that section of the country.

WANTS PUBLICATION.

"I, as one of the executive committee of the Oklahoma Nurserymen's Association, will say that we shall immediately ask the board of agriculture to adopt a new plan in the way of giving out its financial statements, especially those that apply to the inspection of nurserymen," said J. T. Pierce, of Oklahoma City. Continuing, Mr. Pierce said: "There are a certain number of nurserymen alleged who have been inspected, according to the financial report as made. The nurserymen pay for this inspection, which is promised to them at absolute cost. Why would it not be just and right that each one of these nurserymen's names be given in the report, his residence, the number of his inspection, and the amount he had to pay? There were only eighty-seven inspected. The matter is of enough importance to be entitled to an itemized statement of the whole thing. The law requires that the entomologist from the experiment station at Stillwater must make the inspection, for which he shall receive $5 per day and his expenses. This expense is prorated to the nurserymen inspected. If every inspection is contained in an itemized statement and made a part of the secretary's annual report, then the whole matter would be plain. As it is, there is so much apportioned for 'nursery inspection,' and that is all there is to show for it."

RETAILERS MEET.

A meeting of the National Association of Retail Nurserymen was held at Rochester January 22. Trade conditions were discussed. Wm. Pitkin is president. In the evening the fourth annual banquet took place at the Eureka Club, 100 being present. C. J. Malloy was one of those who responded to toasts, his subject being "The Square Deal."

Among the members present from outside of Rochester were: Orlando Harrison, of Berlin, Md., president of the American Association of Nurserymen; E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind., chairman of the executive committee and official representative of the American Association of Nurserymen; Prof. John Craig, of Cornell; George S. Josselyn, Fredonia; D. H. Henry, C. G. Chase and Theodore J. Smith, Geneva; James M. Pitkin, postmaster, Newark, N. Y.; O. D. Green, Syracuse; George C. Perkins, John Watson, C. H. Stuart, William W. Gould, Arthur M. Christy, Newark, N.Y.; and W. T. Wood, Richmond, Va.

The committee in charge of the dinner was: B. F. Allen, chairman; W. W. Wyman, E. S. Osborne and Charles L. Yates.

NEW YORK HORTICULTURISTS.

The annual meeting of the Western New York Horticultural Society always attracts a large body of fruit growers to Rochester, and consequently a large following of nurserymen. The fifty-second meeting was held January 23 and 24. The membership is 900. The remarkable midwinter exhibit of fruit was greatly enjoyed. The exhibit of the New York Agricultural Experiment Station was one of the finest and most practical ever shown in connection with these annual meetings, while the exhibits by firms and individual members have never been equaled. The total number of plates was over 600, and George T. Powell, an expert in fruit culture and in judging of fruit, and who acted on the committee to report on this exhibit, declared that the perfection in form and color was equal if not superior to anything produced on the Pacific coast or in the great northwest fruit-growing region.

The display of spraying devices and outfits, with engines in action, was by far the largest and most successful ever assembled in this section, and the demonstration that was given won many customers for the various exhibitors.

The first business to come before the meeting was the election of officers. W. C. Barry was reëlected president and S. D. Willard, of Geneva; J. S. Woodward, of Lockport; F. B. Wilson, of Halls Corners, and B. J. Case, of Sodus, were

FORESTER FOR RAILROAD.

E. A. Sterling, formerly assistant forester in the Department of Agriculture at Washington, has been appointed forester of the Pennsylvania railroad. Mr. Sterling will be the first forester of an American railroad. He will assume his duties March 1. The action of the Pennsylvania railroad in taking up forestry is for the purpose of planting trees systematically to furnish a cross-tie supply in future years, and follows experiments which the company has been making in the last five years. During this time a million and a half trees have been planted on land owned by the company. A government forestry expert was engaged last spring to assist the management in planning its forestry work, which is now to be undertaken officially by the company. Six hundred and eighty-one acres of land near Altoona, Pa., will, in the springs of 1907 and 1908, be planted with chestnut and red oak seedlings.

3 NEW CANNAS

WILLIAM SAUNDERS

The flowers are large, of splendid form, and are borne very freely in immense clusters. The color is a deep rich shining scarlet slightly dappled with crimson. Foliage is a rich bronze. Height, 3½ to 4 feet. We believe that Wm. Saunders is decidedly the most perfect Canna of this type that has been introduced. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

OTTAWA

Is a strong grower, very robust and 5 to 6 feet high. The flowers are large and beautifully formed, color is carmine with tints of old rose and deep coral, add to this the silken sheen and you can imagine the effect a few plants will produce.

NOTE—We had this Canna on trial among the Canadian experimental stations last summer and this is the official report of their expert: "Quite distinct and one of the most beautiful shades of color I ever saw in Cannas. Of 70 massed in one bed during the past season, this was the most floriferous in the collection, coming into bloom early and continuing until cut down by frost, as many as 18 expanded heads of blooms being counted at one time on a plant, and not a poor one among them, all being of immense size." 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

NEW YORK

Has the Orchid type of flower. They have much more substance than the flowers of the other varieties of this class, and will stand the hot sunshine as well as the toughest varieties of cannas. The color is a solid rich scarlet covered with a beautiful glowing sheen. The flowers are large and contrast beautifully with the dark bronze foliage. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

Send for our list and prices of 60 other leading varieties of Cannas.

The Market.

The excess of rainy weather still continues and the end is apparently not yet. We have only had two days of sunshine in the last two weeks and the effect has been to reduce the quantities of stock offered by about fifty per cent. Business, on the other hand, especially in the line of funeral work, has been good and neither the growers nor the retailers have any difficulty in disposing of their stock.

Violets are plentiful and of splendid quality; in fact, they are about the only article of which we have an abundance at this time. The price of roses and carnations has not changed since the holidays, although most of the growers are not cutting more than one-half their usual quantity. Adiantum and cut asparagus are scarcer than they have ever been at this season of the year. None of the growers seems to have any surplus and much trouble is experienced in getting any good stock. Smilax is also well cut down and, although several of the largest growers are keeping houses filled for Easter trade, little of it is offered at present.

Bulbous stock is somewhat easier than at last report, although we have not had sufficient sunshine to bring anything except small quantities into market. Outside mums are gone and a few early sweet peas are making their appearance. California red berries are almost out of season and this useful adjunct to the business will be seen no more until next Thanksgiving.

Various Notes.

At the opening of the new American theater January 21 the town outdid itself in the size and number of the floral designs displayed. The Sievers Foral Co., Boland Floral Co., Pelicano & Co. and the Art Floral Co. had the bulk of the orders.

The continued rainy weather makes business quiet for the retail dealers in the plant line. Things will certainly be lively when they commence, but owing to the lateness of the season, stock is bound to be short.

A. W. Hincks, of C. C. Morse & Co., is visiting the dealers in the nearby towns. G.

UTILIZING EUCALYPTUS.

I made mention a short time ago in these columns that several large tracts of land in California were being planted to several varieties of eucalyptus, with the intention of using the material in railway construction. Along the same lines the forestry service has been experimenting with the more common blue gum, and a few points have been demonstrated which promise to add materially to the wealth of the state and have only recently been brought to light through Prof. L. E. Hunt, the well-known horticulturist. Tests made by Prof. Hunt have demonstrated that eucalyptus can be successfully substituted for some of the hardwoods that are becoming difficult to obtain.

The department has been interested in the use of eucalyptus for manufacturing purposes for some time. Recently, however, the attention of the government has been attracted to the importance of this field and an appropriation was made to aid in conducting a series of experiments. Prof. Hunt has been assisted in the work by A. L. Heim, the government representative, who is an expert and a well-known authority on timber and valuable woods. They have received shipments of timber from a great many places and tests have been made to determine to what extent the rapidly growing eucalyptus could be utilized for manufacturing purposes.

The results of their experiments have been cleverly set forth in a trade bulletin issued by the United States Department of Forestry Service.

The article calls attention to the fact that the eucalyptus has not thus far been extensively used by manufacturers in the United States and giving as a reason that the supply has not been sufficient to establish a market. It states further that blue gum, the most common species in California, has, however, competed with black locust for insulator pins, has given satisfactory service in chisel and hammer handles and has been used for wagon tongues, axles, shafts, spokes and hubs. It is hard, strong and tough and is stronger than hickory, and that fifteen-year-old sugar gum is nearly as strong as black hickory and ninety-one per cent as strong as second growth hickory.

The wood of very sappy trees is apt to warp, but the wood from more mature growths can be easily handled to prevent warping. Early seasoning should proceed slowly and open piling is desirable and the wood should be sheltered until dry.

Many of the eucalyptus family grow most luxuriantly in California and under forest conditions form straight, tall poles, free from branches and have, therefore, especial value as timber trees.

In the light of such information as this, many an owner may begin to plant his barren hillsides out to eucalyptus and doubtless as the industry grows it may even be found profitable to uproot many of the small orchards throughout the state and set out eucalypti in their stead. A grove of this kind can be cut every five years and even for fuel purposes it is said to be a more profitable crop than almost anything else that requires so little trouble to develop. G.

BEACON CARNATION

ORANGE-SCARLET

Comes as near the Ideal Commercial Scarlet as any yet offered.

ORIGINATED AT ELLIS, MASS.

Has been Tested Four Years

AND PROVED TO BE

Of Great Commercial Value

Do you want to wear the smile that won't come off? Grow Beacon

Commencing to bloom early in the fall, it gives a profusion of flowers for Christmas (when scarlet is in demand at remunerative prices) and CONTINUES THROUGHOUT THE WINTER MONTHS. It may not score so high on the exhibition table as some, but WILL FIGURE UP ON THE RIGHT SIDE OF YOUR LEDGER in a manner highly satisfactory.

The blooms, under ordinary culture, average 2¾ to 3 inches in diameter, the guard petals are broad, well arranged and of good substance, the center loosely arranged and not too full. Color scarlet with a dash of orange, which lightens up the flower, especially during dull, dark weather, making it very brilliant and attractive. The stem is long, stiff and wiry. Calyx long and seldom bursts (less than four per cent last winter.) It propagates easily. The plant is a vigorous, healthy grower, of ideal habit, and a most profuse bloomer. A night temperature of 50 to 52 degrees suits it admirably.

We wish to ANNOUNCE TO THE TRADE that we have withdrawn our Crimson Carnation

from the market, at least for this season, and perhaps permanently. During the last few weeks of dark weather it has shown an inclination to contract a disease which if allowed to get any headway would speedily ruin it for commercial growing. The strain of dissemination, and subjection to changed methods of culture would undoubtedly cause it to go to pieces right away, and knowing the circumstances it would be unjust to the variety and the trade to let it go out. We will continue to grow it as our main crimson, and if it throws off the disease entirely we may let it go out later, but not until we feel assured that it will trot, and be a credit to us. While we regret this very much, we are grateful that it showed this weakness before we had begun sending out the stock.

BRANTFORD, CAN.

Brantford is a beautiful little city of 10,000 inhabitants. It has been identified with the florists' business for over thirty years, its pioneer in the field, James B. Hay, still hale and hearty, conducting a general horticultural establishment at the old stand, with greenhouses and a seed and bulb department.

Thomas A. Ivey, with his three sons and daughter associated with him, has one of the most up-to-date stores in Canada and does an extensive local and shipping business, having agencies in every town and village within a radius of fifty miles. He grows a general assortment in his greenhouses, depending largely on the Dale estate, at Brampton for his cut flowers. On Friday morning, January 25, one of the boilers in his greenhouses exploded, the intense cold causing the accident, but vigorous hustling and the use of stoves prevented serious loss.

The value of system is here proven in every part of his business, and the store is a model in arrangement, convenience and beauty; few better, even in New York. His daughter and son are the artists of the company, and adepts, as may be seen by the illustration of their work, sent out in the form of advertising booklets, which are no small factor in bringing them mail-order business from surrounding towns. J. A. S.

ELBERON, N. J.

The Elberon Horticultural Society held its regular meeting January 21, President Robertson in the chair. One new member was elected and two were proposed for membership. The exhibition table was well filled. The following were the chief exhibits: A vase of Mignonette Golden Machet, shown by P. Murray; a vase of Freesia Purity, by A. Bauer; Roman hyacinths, by J. Kennedy; vegetables, by F. Dettlinger, and violets, by A. Greil.

W. F. Ross, representing the F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, was present and made a few interesting remarks. The exhibitors made instructive remarks about their exhibits. G. M.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

First-class Certificate, Madison and Indianapolis

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. No discount.

Price, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Jettie Robinson Dew.

Jettie Robinson Dew, the wife of Arthur H. Dew, passed away December 19, 1906, aged 30 years, after nine weeks of illness. Until recently her health was considered excellent, when suddenly she became ill with stomach trouble and continued to grow worse. All that human skill could do was of no avail.

Mrs. Dew was born at Albion, Mich., and all her life was spent in this place. She graduated from Albion college in 1892. She was a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church. She leaves a husband and a little daughter, Gwendolyn. Dorothy, the first-born, died three years ago.

Arthur J. Newton.

Arthur J. Newton, head of the Newton Floral Co., of Norfolk, Va., died at his home January 22, after a week's illness from pneumonia, at the age of 62 years.

Mr. Newton came from the north to Norfolk fifty years ago. He married Annie P. Odend'hal, of Norfolk, who, with four sons, survives him. The sons are: Arthur M., Ernest J., William J. and Alton R. Newton. He also leaves a brother, John Newton, of Hartford, Conn., and four sisters: Miss Hannah Newton, of New York city, Mrs. Olive Brittingham, of Mt. Vernon, N. Y., Mrs. Sylvia Rice, of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Erasmus Gornsey, of New York city.

For many years Mr. Newton was an extensive truck gardener in Norfolk county, but for a number of years he has been at the head of the Newton Floral Co. in Norfolk, which had a small beginning, but which has grown to its present extensive proportions. He was also president of the Mutual Benefit Association, a farmers' insurance company of Norfolk, Princess Anne and Nansemond counties. He was a prominent member of the Methodist church. The funeral occurred January 25 at the residence, relatives from the north being present.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

There have been no large decorations the last week and the continued high prices have had the effect of putting a damper on small buyers, so that most of the retailers are complaining, but stock still continues scarce and it takes it all to take care of what trade there is.

The weather has been extremely cold since January 22, with the thermometer hovering around the zero mark. The coldest reported was at L. I. Neff's place, at Springdale, Saturday night, when the thermometer registered 14 degrees below zero, falling 12 degrees between 11 o'clock and midnight.

Various Notes.

The Pittsburg wholesale florists' employees' first dance will be held at Cyclorama parlors, Monday evening, February 11. The committee assures all friends who attend a good time.

The club smoker, held January 22, was not so well attended as usual. The exceedingly cold weather, which set in that afternoon, no doubt had something to do with keeping some of the boys looking after their houses. However, those who were there had a pleasant time. Ed McCollum, of the Pittsburg Florists' Exchange, and George Marshall, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., did a funny stunt in black and white in which they touched up almost every one in the trade. It was a feature of the evening and everything said was original. All were pleased with the genuine wit they displayed. There would be an opening for them if they changed their line of business. During the evening a short business session was held for the nomination of officers for the ensuing year. By unanimous vote all the old officers were nominated for re-election.

The club has had a successful year, growing in membership, and also has a nice nest egg in the treasury. At the next meeting we expect reports from those who attended the carnation convention at Toronto. The delegates arrived home Saturday morning after a pleasant trip, and all praise the kind treatment given them by our Canadian brethren. Hoo-Hoo.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.—E. Hippard is again about, after undergoing an operation in the hospital.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—F. H. Kramer has decided to postpone the distribution of Queen Beatrice rose for one year.

AMES, IA.—A new Agricultural hall to cost $300,000 is well under way at the Iowa State College at Ames. The total enrollment is 1,600. The course in horticulture includes floriculture.

MALDEN, Mass.—D. F. Roy, superintendent of the Converse estate, and who has had charge of Pine Banks park for some years, has been elected one of the park commissioners of Malden.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Owing to unavoidable accident and unforeseen delay in the construction of my new addition for the growing of

QUEEN BEATRICE

I find it impossible to produce sufficient young stock to supply the orders already in hand to justify me in disseminating QUEEN BEATRICE this spring. I make this announcement thus early to avoid inconvenence to those who have reserved space for Q. B.

Thanking my many friends for their kind and favorable expression, who have seen the rose grow, and the many patrons who favored me with their liberal orders for 1907 and have consented to leave their orders stand for 1908 delivery.

Thanking you again, I am Most respectfully yours,

F. H. KRAMER, 916 F St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

The bright, clear weather has again made its appearance and is helping the steady increase in roses and carnations. There has been a steady demand for all kinds of cut flowers. Roses and carnations are both scarce and the price continues high. Narcissi and lilies of the valley are selling well, and in fact all kinds of flowers suitable for funeral work are used. Violets are coming in more regularly but are not up to their usual supply and are bringing fairly good prices. Callas will be a short crop.

Various Notes.

T. W. Besley, the state forester of Maryland, will deliver a course of lectures on tree study and elementary forestry to the teachers of the public schools here.

J. J. Perry and Miss Effie L. Shipley were married Thursday evening, January 24. Mr. Perry is the manager of the Baltimore Florists' Exchange and is well known among the trade.

An abundance of fern leaves are growing on the hills of the old Franklin road.

W. Keir, of Pikesville, had an unusual experience January 23, when reaching home, to find one of his houses nearly frozen out. It was a case of pitch in and fire up. The damage was slight. After this he will have a night fireman during the cold spell.

The heavy mortality in Baltimore last week increased business in the way of funeral work. J. L. T.

CORSICANA, TEX.

The season has been mild and there has not been enough frost to kill even the tender plants. Many plants, such as rose geraniums, vincas, abutilons, plumbagos and lantanas are putting on new growth and will soon be in bloom again if mild weather continues. Roses, verbenas, Paper Whites and double Roman hyacinths are blooming outdoors and Dutch hyacinths and daffodils will soon be in bloom. Elms, maples, cydonias, honeysuckles and yellow jasmine are in bloom. Peaches, plums and many other trees are opening their buds.

Mr. and Mrs. Clowe report that their young stock of greenhouse and bedding plants is growing too fast. The temperature is often 75 degrees and sometimes 85 degrees in the houses with doors and ventilators open.

Denver, Colo.—W. L. Sternenberger is still on the sick list, his illness having lasted over a year.

DAHLIAS

Twelve thousand A. D. Livoni improved Dahlia Bulbs, the choice pink show variety, and the surplus from sixty other varieties. The cream of a list of over five hundred kinds from which will be grown in our greenhouses, just erected, choice selection of plants. Guaranteed strictly fancy stock, true to name and without insects or fungi.

ELLWOOD, IND.

The greenhouse of F. W. Blubaugh, which was built last summer, is 30x100 and fourteen feet to the ridge. It has thirty-two inches of glass in the side and ventilators on the east side. The red cedar posts are set in concrete as are also the ridge and purlin posts. The wall-plate is five feet from the ground and is fastened to the posts by boring holes in the posts and filling them with white lead and then screwing in 5-inch bolts. The sides have a layer of shiplap, then a layer of heavy building paper and then are sided with first-class cypress.

There are four beds, one of which is four feet wide, the other three being six feet. All are solid. The beds are filled in with two feet of cinders, two inches of clay, then six inches of good soil. They are used for lettuce and the experiment has proved satisfactory. Mr. Blubaugh has taken off one crop of heavy lettuce and has another that will mature in a week or so. The material for the greenhouse was furnished by the J. C. Moninger Co.

SALISBURY, MD.

The Salisbury Florist Co. added a new greenhouse for carnations in the fall, but they were a complete failure. There are some fine Narcissi and Romans. There is not a rush of business at this time of year. This firm has plants in W. F. Allens' seed store on Main street.

W. F. Allen, who opened a seed store on Main street last February, has done a good business.

The Misses L. & A. Hitch have had quite a busy winter, with lots of funeral work. They have just finished their mums, which were fine. They were burned out at their store last April and did not reopen until October 18. Trade is up to expectations.

OGONTZ, PA.—Wm. Kleinheinz, gardener to P. A. B. Widener, has recently returned from a trip through Germany and Belgium.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

The Illinois State Florists' Association meets at Bloomington, Tuesday and Wednesday, February 19 and 20. The Bloomington Florists' Club is sparing no pains to make this the banner meeting. It has secured Odd Fellows' hall. It is located one block from the court house, and has plenty of room for the meeting and exhibits. The exhibition committee is already assured that there will be a good exhibit of cut flowers, including many of the new carnations, also a good display of florists' supplies. Bloomington has good hotel accommodations at reasonable rates and good street car service.

A. R. Knowles.

A FERN HOUSE.

What is the ideal house for growing ferns and how should it stand, east and west or north and south?

A north and south house is, without doubt, suitable for the growing of ferns, as many ferns are shade-loving plants. Those that will endure the direct rays of our summer sun, such as the nephrolepis, will get sufficient sunlight from an even-span house with north and south ridge. An east and west house would be sure to need the southern slope shaded in summer time.

Tropical ferneries, even in England, are often excavated, the floor of the houses being several feet below the grade of the surrounding surface. This is perhaps done to obviate so much need of fire heat. While the majority of ferns that we florists grow like a warm temperature, few, if any, like fire heat at their roots. There is no need of excavating for the fern house. It is too expensive; but I should build the walls of brick and place the heating pipes on the walls, or anywhere except beneath the benches, and the floor of the house should be the natural surface, or two inches of fine gravel spread over the surface. There is a natural humidity rising from mother earth which is congenial to ferns, and if the floor of the house was cement or tile you would have to be continually dampening down to create the same moisture.

There is no need of side ventilation in your walls. Plenty of ventilation at the ridge is all you need. The ferns include such a numberless family, and their natural environments differ so widely, that it would be difficult to build a house suitable to many genera. But as a rule I venture to say that the great majority of our ferns like it cool at the roots and warm for their fronds.

Here is a Business Book For Business Men

SECOND EDITION

THOROUGHLY REVISED AND BROUGHT UP TO DATE

NO SCIENCE, BUT LOTS OF PRACTICAL COMMON SENSE

"Find enclosed $5 for the Florists' Manual, by William Scott. It is the best book of the age on commercial floriculture and should be in the home of every gardener."—CONRAD FORBACH, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I have several times been consulted by those who would make a beginning in the Florists' business. In each case I have said that the first step is to subscribe for a Trade Paper, and the next to procure a copy of The Florists' Manual."—J. A. VALENTINE, Pres. Park Floral Co., Denver, Colo.

No dry-as-dust botanical classifications, but tells you just how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

TELLS you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

Treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

Greenhouse Heating.

PIPING A NEW HOUSE.

I am building a greenhouse 21x104. I have planned to use a 2½-inch flow with twelve 2-inch returns, four under each bench. Have I allowed for enough pipe for Connecticut climate?

L. C. A.

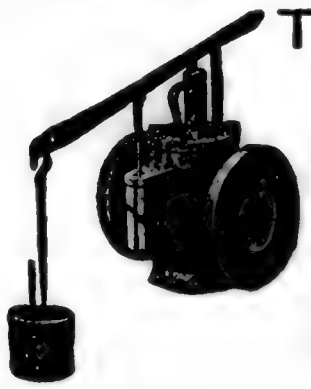
You do not state the temperature you desire, but figuring your house on a basis of 60 degrees, if you use a 3-inch riser (2½-inch is too small) and twelve 2-inch returns, as you have planned, you will not go far wrong, assuming that you are to use hot water at 180 degrees. If you use less heat more pipe will be required, and if you require a temperature of 70 degrees the piping should be increased accordingly. L. C. C.

GAS FOR FUEL.

I would like to know if either natural or manufactured gas is used for fuel and what florists think of its value as compared to coal. Is it harder on the boiler and does it cost more or less than coal? W. P. R.

Yes, natural gas is frequently used for greenhouse heating in localities where this fuel is abundant and cheap. It is a question how much one can afford to pay for it in comparison with coal, for the gas makes no ashes to be removed, requires no night fireman, and when intelligently used is no harder upon the boiler than other fuels producing heat of equal intensity. If the value of the gas is to be determined solely by its heat producing power, then it must be figured that when the cost of 30,000 feet of gas exceeds the cost of a ton of coal it is cheaper to produce the heat from coal; but as above suggested the gas has other advantages which must be weighed against the cost of coal.

L. C. C.



INSUFFICIENT RADIATION.

We have installed a heating plant at our house which is not doing well. The overhead system of piping is used. There are two 2-inch flows, one under each ridge, with a rise of nine feet above the heater, then gradually rising to the other end of the house. There are four 1¼-inch returns along the south, east and west walls; also four 1¼-inch returns through the center of the house. The center run of returns is fed by two 1-inch pipes taken from the two 2-inch flows. The returns along the wall are fed by these same 2-inch flows. Our heater is a No. 20 Wilks hot water heater. The returns enter it through three 2-inch pipes.

Our house is 29x48, double-span, ten feet to the ridge. The south end of the house is glass from the wall up and the wall is three feet high. There are walls three feet high on the east and west sides and three feet of glass. The walls are made of cement blocks. There is an office and workroom at the north end. The heater is in the basement below the office and workroom, nine and one-half feet below the highest point in the system.

The expansion tank is two feet above the highest point in the system and is connected to the flow pipe nine feet above the heater. There is a Honeywell circulating apparatus connected to the system just below the expansion tank and is also connected to the expansion tank.

Have we used the right size of pipe and enough of it? Is the pipe put in right? Could we leave our piping as it is and by installing a steam heater use hot water during the spring and fall, then when severe weather sets in draw off the water and use steam? If not, what change would you suggest? We wish to maintain a temperature of 50 degrees when the temperature outdoors is 20 degrees below zero. A. F. & P. C.

I can only find about 700 lineal feet of 1¼-inch pipe in the house, according to the statement given, which is about 300 feet short of the amount necessary to heat the house properly by steam, and about one-half of what they should carry on a hot-water basis. By increasing the pipe to about 1,100 lineal feet of 1¼-inch pipe it will be feasible to heat them as you suggest and use hot water during spring and fall and steam during severe spells. The expansion tank should not connect with the flow pipes but with the return close to the boiler and be carried as high as possible above the highest point in the system; twelve or fifteen feet is not too much. The plan of the piping seems to be all right.

L. C. C.

HEATING TWO HOUSES.

I have two north and south houses which I wish to heat with hot water. The first is 15x65, with walls three and one-half feet high and seven and one-half feet to the ridge. The other is 26x100. The boiler is in a cellar so that the top is about level with the floor. The grate is 30x36 inches. There is a 4-inch outlet on top of the boiler. The main return is a 3-inch pipe. Will you give the size and number of flows and returns for each house? Is the boiler large enough to heat to 60 degrees in zero weather? How high should I place my expansion tank? D. N. C.

The boiler is barely large enough to carry the two houses. Its capacity figures about 1,400 square feet of radiation, while the houses require about 1,300 square feet. The large house should have a 3-inch flow and thirteen 2-inch returns. I would not advise the use of returns smaller than 2-inch on a house of this size. The smaller house can be heated by the use of a 2-inch flow and nine 2-inch returns, or, if you wish to work all the piping under the benches, the small house should have two 2-inch flows, each carrying four 2-inch returns. The large house can be piped in another fashion by using two 2½-inch flows, each supplying six 2-inch returns, all the pipes under the benches or along the side walls. If you use 1-inch connection from the main return to the expansion tank located fifteen or eighteen feet above the point of connection it should be all right. L. C. C.

BOILER FEED-PUMP.

We heat our greenhouses by steam and contemplate emptying our return pipes into a cistern sixteen feet deep. What kind of a pump do we need to put that hot water back into the boiler against twenty pounds of steam pressure and handle 500 gallons per hour? Where can we get one and what will it cost?

F. B.

You can accomplish what you wish in either of two ways: First, by the use of a boiler feed-pump to lift the water from the well and deliver it into the boiler or, second, by the use of a steam-trap. There are many good boiler feed-pumps on the market, any one of which will do the work. Write to the advertisers of steam specialties in the REVIEW. The steam-trap has the advantage that it works automatically, while the feed-pump would require attention if not provided with controlling devices for starting and stopping it as needed.

Greenhouse Heating.

PIPING A NEW HOUSE.

I am building a greenhouse 21x104. I have planned to use a 2½-inch flow with twelve 2-inch returns, four under each bench. Have I allowed for enough pipe for Connecticut climate?

L. C. A.

You do not state the temperature you desire, but figuring your house on a basis of 60 degrees, if you use a 3-inch riser (2½-inch is too small) and twelve 2-inch returns, as you have planned, you will not go far wrong, assuming that you are to use hot water at 180 degrees. If you use less heat more pipe will be required, and if you require a temperature of 70 degrees the piping should be increased accordingly. L. C. C.

GAS FOR FUEL.

I would like to know if either natural or manufactured gas is used for fuel and what florists think of its value as compared to coal. Is it harder on the boiler and does it cost more or less than coal? W. P. R.

Yes, natural gas is frequently used for greenhouse heating in localities where this fuel is abundant and cheap. It is a question how much one can afford to pay for it in comparison with coal, for the gas makes no ashes to be removed, requires no night fireman, and when intelligently used is no harder upon the boiler than other fuels producing heat of equal intensity. If the value of the gas is to be determined solely by its heat producing power, then it must be figured that when the cost of 30,000 feet of gas exceeds the cost of a ton of coal it is cheaper to produce the heat from coal; but as above suggested the gas has other advantages which must be weighed against the cost of coal.

L. C. C.

We have installed a heating plant at our house which is not doing well. The overhead system of piping is used. There are two 2-inch flows, one under each ridge, with a rise of nine feet above the heater, then gradually rising to the other end of the house. There are four 1¼-inch returns along the south, east and west walls; also four 1¼-inch returns through the center of the house. The center run of returns is fed by two 1-inch pipes taken from the two 2-inch flows. The returns along the wall are fed by these same 2-inch flows. Our heater is a No. 20 Wilks hot water heater. The returns enter it through three 2-inch pipes.

Our house is 29x48, double-span, ten feet to the ridge. The south end of the house is glass from the wall up and the wall is three feet high. There are walls three feet high on the east and west sides and three feet of glass. The walls are made of cement blocks. There is an office and workroom at the north end. The heater is in the basement below the office and workroom, nine and one-half feet below the highest point in the system.

The expansion tank is two feet above the highest point in the system and is connected to the flow pipe nine feet above the heater. There is a Honeywell circulating apparatus connected to the system just below the expansion tank and is also connected to the expansion tank.

Have we used the right size of pipe and enough of it? Is the pipe put in right? Could we leave our piping as it is and by installing a steam heater use hot water during the spring and fall, then when severe weather sets in draw off the water and use steam? If not,

GRAND RAPIDS.

The Market.

The weather has turned extremely cold, the thermometer hovering from zero to 16 degrees above. Snow is six inches deep, making good sleighing. The extreme cold was preceded by two days of continuous rain, which caused the river to rise rapidly to flood height, then freeze solid so as to form an ice-jam. This jam has been pushed up higher and higher by the water underneath, until it has inundated a portion of the west side, backed up in the sewers and filled the basements of dwellings and stores on Canal and other streets. A large gang of men are at work night and day building sand bag embankments to keep the waters and ice in check.

Trade has settled down to a healthy, steady grind. All are busy. Flowers are coming in larger quantities, except roses, which are at the famine point. Carnations are barely plentiful enough to fill all demands. Callas and Easter lilies are more plentiful. Tulips and Von Sions, although a bit short in the stem, are on the market and meet with a fair sale. Stevia is about over.

Club Meeting.

An attempt is being made to revive interest in the Florists' Club, that has been dormant for several years, and every indication points to success. A meeting was held January 24 at the Board of Trade rooms, Henry Smith presiding. Mr. Freyling was appointed temporary secretary. The idea is to so expand the scope of the club that it will include with the florists, lettuce growers, seedsmen and nurserymen.

A committee of three was appointed to draw up a new set of bylaws. The committee consisted of N. B. Stover, Frank Strong and Geo. F. Crabb. Another committee was appointed to submit a list of prices on bedding stock, consisting of Mr. Freyling, Geo. F. Crabb and Alfred Hanna. There were fourteen present and all enthusiastic over the prospects of having a live, progressive club once more. The meeting adjourned for one week.

The "Just as Good" Argument

Our cast-iron foot piece for columns.

We don't claim to build "as good houses" as the other fellows, but we do claim to build better than the other fellows. We simply build our houses our way—and the other fellow talks—while we keep on building our houses our way. Yes, our way does cost a bit more, but look at what you get for what it costs! A splendid, up-to-date house, one that has the galvanized ice-clearing eave plate, sashbar clasp, angle iron posts, cast iron foot pieces, pipe column fittings, every one of which adds tremendously to the rigidity of your house and cuts down repair bills. The whole question simmers right down to paying a slight advance at the start and getting our iron parts that will make your house last for years, or your using all wood materials that at once begin to run up repair bills and keep running them up as long as you run the house. If you want materials of endurance, the lasters, then order our iron parts. Write for prices.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

A STORY AND A MORAL.

Chapter I.

Once upon a time there lived in the city of York a well-to-do family named Smythe. Their eldest son, Reginald, was one of those happy-go-lucky chaps, very popular and an all-round good fellow. He had a good income as assistant manager of the Eastern Realty Co., and, as many young men do, lived right up to his income.

Strolling down street one day he met Jack Weathered.

"Hello, Reggie!" says Jack, "going to the ball Wednesday evening?"

"What ball is that?"

"Why, the shipmasters', at the Masonic Temple."

"O, you bet I am!" exclaimed Reggie. "By jinks! That just reminds me of some flowers I must order."

That afternoon he placed an order with Manager Fales, of the Corner Flower Shop, for a bouquet of 300 violets, at $2 per hundred. "Send them to Miss Mae Russell, at the Arlington apartments, Wednesday afternoon, April 21, and charge to me, providing my name is still good," added Reggie, thinking of his already large bill.

"Certainly, Mr. Smythe, do not worry about that little bill. Your name is good as gold," returned Fales, instead of hinting that he pay something on his account, which amounted to about $65, for violets, roses, valley and two dozen Beauties sent Miss Fay Lightfoot, who had appeared at the Gaiety.

During the summer no flowers were needed. In August our friend left on an extended vacation trip, returning in October with a fine coat of tan and an empty purse.

Now Mr. Smythe did not mean to cheat the Flower Shop out of that $65, but other bills had to be paid, while those people seemed in no hurry. But when he wanted some flowers for Thanksgiving he felt ashamed to face Mr. Fales.

About that time the latter thought it time for Mr. Smythe to pay up, but, instead of seeing him personally, he sent a young, snippy clerk who made several fruitless attempts to collect. Then R. Smythe was put down as a deadbeat and his name scratched off the books.

Chapter II.

"I would like several dozen of your best rose-pink carnations sent Thanksgiving, and also a large bunch of violets, but first of all, may I open an account with you? My name is Reginald Smythe, of 741 Merone avenue," said our friend to Mr. Maxwell, of Maxwell's store, in York.

"Why, of course," said Mr. Maxwell, at the same time giving Reggie to understand that all accounts are opened with the understanding that they be settled by the tenth of the following month.

Reggie became a regular customer, and soon acquired the habit of paying promptly. After a time he took unto himself a wife, and settled down, becoming a sound business man, and was classed among Maxwell's best people. He never entered the Corner Flower Shop again, not because he had not the money to pay up, but because he felt ashamed, after remaining away for years.

Moral.

Collect your outstanding accounts, even if through suit; you may not only lose $65, but a good customer.

A SUBTROPICAL BED.

We wish to plant a circular bed fifteen feet in diameter, producing a conical form with an abundance of showy foliage, suggesting tropical growth and with enough bright colors to be attractive. We thought of ricinus for the center, next a row of caladiums surrounded by tall cannas with bronze leaves, then a row or two of dwarf cannas and last, a border of low growing, free flowering plants. Any criticisms or suggestion will be appreciated. F. A. F.

Ricinis Zanzibarensis, with its gigantic leaves, will make an excellent centerpiece for such a size of bed. Caladium esculentum is not sufficiently tall growing to come next to the ricinis. We would prefer Canna King Humbert, with very large flowers of an orange scarlet color and handsome, rich, coppery-bronze foliage. Next a row of yellow Canna Florence Vaughan, or, if crimson is preferred, Alphonse Bouvier, followed by the Caladium esculentum and an outer band of Salvia splendens compacta. These would fill the bed sufficiently without a ring of dwarf cannas next to the edging.

If a solid scarlet or crimson-scarlet effect is desired, the yellow cannas can be omitted, or, if more yellow would be preferred, a double ring of the Florence Vaughan might be planted. In order to cover the space more quickly a zigzagged double row of cannas and salvia could be set out. W. N. C.

DOUBLE PETUNIAS.

I would like to know what kind of soil, what temperature and the amount of water to use in growing double petunias after they have been rooted. I can't make them grow after potting them. J. P. R.

It is possible that the cause of the double petunias making no growth is that the cuttings rooted were from flowerless, or what is commonly termed blind wood, in which case they are of no value. Cuttings when from cut back plants, which have been kept in a fairly warm greenhouse and rubbed off with a heel, root freely and should grow right away from now onward. A compost of two-thirds loam and one-third old cow manure, with a little dash of sand, is suitable. At the first shift from the cutting bench, however, a lighter mixture of loam, leaf-mold and sand would be better. A temperature of 50 to 55 degrees at night and a light, sunny position is desirable. W. N. C.

BEAUTE CELESTE.

It is always interesting to hear from those in the trade on the continent of Europe. Nearly always there is a point to what the European has to say, and not infrequently his choice of English words adds to the interest. The contributor who forwards the photograph of Odontoglossum Beaute Celeste says that "According to me, it is the finest shape we ever saw." This is perhaps not just the way an Englishman would have said it, but there was no mistaking that the writer is of the opinion that in form this flower is the finest of the odontoglossums.

Odontoglossum Beaute Celeste is one of the seedlings raised by Ch. Vuylsteke, of Loochristi, near Ghent, in Belgium, whence have come a number of excellent things in the orchid line. The flower is large, very wide, round and strong. The ground is pure white with few dark markings, as shown in the accompanying illustration. The variety is the result of a cross of Odontoglossum ardentissimum and Odontoglossum crispum. Orchid fanciers consider it something extraordinary.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Foliage Plants.

Aspidistras are never in oversupply. No other foliage plant will stand the same amount of neglect without resenting it. Any potting needed may now be done. This plant does not need a warm house, but grows well in it, and after repotting prefers it. Ficus elastica and F. pandurata will be the better for a sponging. Cuttings of the former will root freely now if a good, steady, bottom heat is at command. A mixture of sphagnum and sand, a close atmosphere and plenty of moisture at the root and they will root quickly. Crotons, dracænas, dieffenbachias and other fine foliage plants will also root readily in the same way. Be sure they are kept well shaded and watered and few will fail to root.

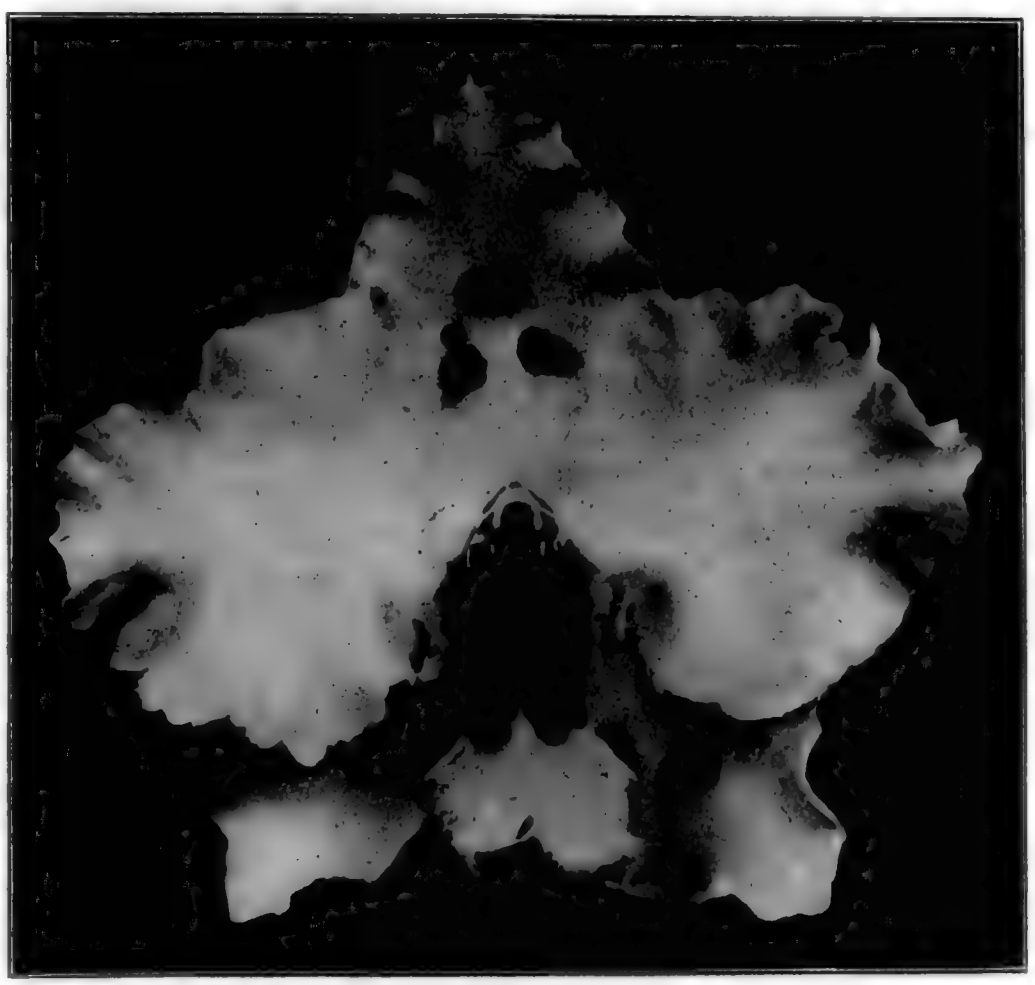
Bouvardias.

If you wish to increase your stock of bouvardias shake all the soil away from one or two old plants, cut the thicker roots in pieces a quarter-inch to a half-inch long, cover with sand in a warm, propagating bed and you will soon have a fine crop of little plants ready to pot off. While bouvardias can also be increased by cuttings of soft wood, we find that the root cuttings make the best plants. Pot off into small pots as soon as they are making new roots. Usually top growth will start first. Keep in a warm house after potting until they are well established. Bouvardias are in less demand than fifteen to twenty years ago, but a batch is useful in midwinter and, if well grown, pays for itself handsomely.

Palms.

Probably some of your palms are now needing a sponging over. The present is a good time to do it, before the spring rush is on. If only a couple of hours a day can be spared, much can be accomplished in a week. Use some fir tree oil or seal oil soap in the water if plants are badly infested with scale, being always careful to avoid sponging young and tender leaves with it and to hose over all plants after sponging. If the pots are dirty, clean them, too. It is surprising how much more valuable a plant with clean leaves and a clean pot looks, as compared with a dirty one.

If any of the palms are getting much potbound they may be potted now. Avoid big shifts. Merely allow space for a little loam around the old balls. Press the soil in firmly and leave a liberal space for water. Too often palms are seen with the soil almost level with the top of the pot. It is impossible to soak such plants without watering them several times.



A good compost for palms is one of two-thirds fibrous loam, one-third leaf-mold, with a liberal addition of sand. Large plants can have some coarse bone added and a little well-dried cow manure.

Some of the more graceful and least vigorous-rooting palms, such as Geonoma gracilis and Cocos Weddelliana, need quite small pots and will only stand small shifts. The pretty and graceful Phœnix Roebelenii is now fairly cheap and plentiful. It is an excellent house plant and should become popular when more widely known. Probably Kentia Belmoreana is the best palm for all purposes. For decorative uses it is easily the best. Areca lutescens, while graceful, is more delicate. Latania Borbonica is a vigorous and easily grown variety which, however, on account of its spreading habit, is of less commercial value. The same applies to the stronger growing of the genus phœnix.

Cyclamens.

Cyclamens are now giving a beautiful display of flowers. They are undoubtedly one of the finest of flowering plants for the retail florist. They ship well and bloom for a long time. They are not "shaky," as some primulas and begonias are in the average furnace-heated house, and are one of the most satisfactory flowering plants grown. Plants flowering, or which soon will be, should have a light, airy house, kept at 45 to 48 degrees at night. They should be shaded from bright sunshine and watered carefully. The mysterious disease generally classed as the "cyclamen mite" is the worst enemy to contend with. The best growers, after trying all imaginable remedies, are baffled by it, and when it has appeared in virulent form the only thing to do is to throw away all old stock and start anew.

Last fall's seedlings should not be neglected. They ought now to be ready for Odontoglossum Beaute Celeste.

Table Piece Arranged With Carnation Winsor and Sprengeri.

2½-inch pots, if they are not already potted. A light, sandy loam, with a little fine charcoal is an excellent compost. Keep them on a bench well up to the light, spray on light days, water carefully, give them a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees at night and they will grow along nicely. While it is possible to have small plants in 4-inch or 5-inch pots for flowering next winter, from seed sown now, the proper time to sow is on or about October 1. Then excellent 6-inch or 7-inch stock can be had.

Shrubs for Easter.

Azalea mollis sold well last Easter. Well-budded dormant plants, if started now, kept well syringed and given 55 degrees at night, will be in flower by the end of March. Usually 8-inch pots are needed for forcing stock. If there are thirty or forty buds per plant they will make handsome specimens. Rhododendrons given similar treatment will require about the same time to flower. Deutzia gracilis and D. Lemoinei make extremely pretty Easter plants. If they have been pot-grown they will be much more satisfactory than nursery-grown stock potted up. Sixty degrees at night now, with cooler treatment as the flowers open, should bring them in within six weeks. Lilacs will come in a week earlier, and may, therefore, be allowed a slightly cooler house. Prunus triloba and Cydonia Japonica need about five weeks. It is best to force all these in the early rather than the late stages of growth.

Bulbous Stock.

We are now getting a little more sunshine and bulbous stock comes along more quickly. All stock grown for cutting should be kept in a darkened case until the shoots are of good length. From now on there will be no trouble about lack of stem. Tulips, hyacinths and narcissi grown in pans for store or retail trade will need less drawing up, as they should be as stocky as possible. Bulbs in flower should have a little shade on the glass. We place newspapers over tulips during the sunniest part of the day. A batch of the various bulbs will need placing in heat at least once a week, to keep up a steady supply of flowers. In addition to La Reine tulip, Keizerskroon, Yellow Prince, Proserpine and other sorts are now very good. Von Sion narcissus is excellent, and that splendid trumpet variety, Golden Spur, is at its best. Victoria forces well and when cheaper will be in great request. If bench room is at a premium the daffodils will flower well below the benches next the path, only they lack a little stiffness in the stem.

Acacia Armata.

Of the several acacias grown this is of the easiest culture and most in evidence at Easter. It should never be forced into flower, but allowed to come along in an ordinary greenhouse temperature. If your plants have been kept cold, bring them now into a house where the temperature does not exceed 50 degrees at night. This plant is beautiful when its flowers are all fresh. When, they assume a brownish hue, however, much of the beauty is gone. Be sure not to syringe after the flower opens, and do not force it hard or it will be ruined. Like all hard-wooded plants, it must be carefully watered. Be certain it does not suffer from dryness at the root. The graceful A. pubescens is scarce and high-priced. Too bad it is not procurable in quantity. What a fine Easter seller plants in 6-inch and 8-inch pots would prove. This variety, also A. Drummondi, A. Riceana, A. cultriformis and other less-known varieties flower about the end of March naturally in a cool greenhouse.

Tersely Told.

Poinsettias should be laid under a bench or in some dry, out-of-the-way-of-frost place until needed.

Do not allow bedding geraniums to remain crowded on the benches. Ease them out, if only a little at a time; it will pay.

If you want strong Primula obconica for next Christmas, sow now. Buy the best grandiflora strain, rather than cheaper seed.

Fumigate freely. Aphis and other pests increase with alarming rapidity these days. If stems are used be careful not to burn the foliage on delicate plants.

When freesias are all cut, if you keep your old bulbs see to it that they are not allowed to become too dry until the new bulbs are matured. It is a mistake to withhold all water after flowers are cut. Give them as light a place as possible until the bulbs are ripe.

Watch your lilies carefully. Take the more backward ones into your warmest and sunniest house. You should see the buds before Lent comes in. Then you are reasonably sure of having them in bloom for Easter. C. W.

PUEBLO, COLO.—G. Fleischer has purchased ten lots adjoining his present property, on which will be built ten greenhouses, making a total of twenty greenhouses to his plant.

RECORD KEEPING.

In every well-regulated establishment there ought to be a rigid system of record keeping. It is not only necessary to know exactly just how many blooms each variety will produce, but also the number of the grades of blooms. The superficial space occupied by each plant should also be taken notice of, so that we may have some data for propagation and future planting plans.

To know exactly just where we stand at the end of each week, month or season must necessarily be of great benefit to every grower, and the benefit derived can only be appreciated by those who have taken the trouble to gather and compile such statistics.

To keep a faithful record of the product of each variety, a card with spaces for each day of the week should be placed in each house and each and every bloom cut from the house should be marked on it under the heading of each variety; totaled at the end of each week and entered in the journal, so that comparisons can be made with future crops.

Cards similar to this should also be in the sorting room, and should show the exact number of blooms of each grade and how they were disposed of. Note should also be made of those varieties which are most in demand, and, as near as possible, the proportion of colors called for.

With such records we can at the end of the season, by a little figuring, arrive at a definite conclusion as to which of the varieties it is most profitable to plant. By rigidly following this method the waste will be reduced to a minimum.

These remarks apply with even more force to carnation crops, chiefly because of the number of varieties in cultivation and the ever increasing number of new varieties which every ambitious grower is anxious to test for himself.

Apart from the successful culture of these new introductions, it is absolutely necessary to have a record, so that we may find out the adaptability of each variety to our soil and climate and their pecuniary value in our home market. This is one of the best ways to make the place pay.

In order to have our record-keeping system complete, it ought to embrace the keeping of temperatures at which each variety does best; the amount and quality of food required by each variety, with remarks concerning the amount of sunshine, moisture, etc., all of which must be of great utility for future reference.

From the time the cutting is put into the cutting bench until it has completed its season's work there should be nothing in its cultivation, behavior under different conditions of temperature, feeding, etc., that should go unrecorded.

This requires a deal of time, but it is time well spent and will amply repay us by leaving no doubt in our minds as to the merits or demerits of the different varieties, methods of culture and paying qualities of the varieties under our care.

RIBES.

FUMES OF ACID.

We would like to know why our roses have stopped blooming. They are two-year-old plants and were cut back in July; but as they grow in summer, we naturally had difficulty in resting them. In September they were benefited by an application of nitrate of soda. They were growing nicely until the third week in November, when some muriatic acid was carelessly distributed throughout the houses. After three or four days the foliage had been burnt entirely off of two-thirds of the plants. Until then we were cutting some fine roses in quantity. Just before the acid was spilt an application of blood and soot was given the roses and the soil became infested with small worms. Owing to the cloudy weather we have had, we were compelled to keep the temperature in daytime down to 60 to 62 degrees and at night from 56 to 58 degrees. We syringe on all bright days. Do you think it was the acid, blood, or dark weather that has caused the check of bloom? S. & R.

There can be little doubt that the exposure to the fumes of the muriatic acid, which caused the plants to shed their foliage, is at the root of the trouble. It also looks to me as if those plants could not be requiring the amount of chemical feeding they were subjected to previous to the exposure to the acid. In their present debilitated condition the best treatment would be to keep the soil rather dry, temperature low, even as low as 54 or 55 degrees, and do no more feeding until the plants regain their health.

The small worms in the soil are of no moment and have nothing to do with the weakness of the stock. It is simply suffering from a dose of poison.

THE WENONAH GARDENS.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of the Wenonah Carnation Gardens, Wenonah, N. J. The houses are iron-frame with cement walls, of Lord & Burnham construction, and were built in 1905 and 1906. The two large houses are 32x250 and the small house is 20x100. Each house has four 5-foot benches, all planted to carnations, of which the following varieties are grown: Enchantress, Fair Maid, The Queen, Queen Louise, Mrs. Joost, Wm. Scott, Genevieve Lord, Lady Bountiful, May Naylor, John E. Haines, Red Sport, Maceo and Melba.

There are seedlings in the second and third year, some of which are promising. Seedling No. 6, of which there are over 1,000 rooted cuttings, is very free, about the color of Fiancee, but does not split. Seedling No. 1 is a strong grower, has stems twenty-four inches long and is the color of Nelson Fisher. Mr. Leisy says, "I have yet to see the first split calyx." Seedling No. 3 is on the style of Peter Fisher's Evangeline. This is also a free bloomer, with a strong calyx. There are other seedlings of interest, but the one Mr. Leisy thinks the most of is an improved Enchantress. He claims it has a better color, is as free a bloomer, is more double and has good keeping qualities; best of all, it is fragrant and does not split. Some of these will be seen next season.

PECKY CYPRESS.

Would pecky cypress be as good as, or better than, soft pine for greenhouse benches where they are to be used for plants with only an inch of sand in the bottom? If soft pine is worth $30 per thousand feet, what would pecky cypress be worth for the same purpose? W. T.

Pecky cypress, while not a handsome lumber, will outlast any other wood in greenhouse benches. This inquiry comes from a city not far distant from Chicago, and in Chicago pecky cypress is used exclusively for bench material by nearly all growers. In the Chicago market pecky cypress is now worth $22 to $23 per thousand feet, so that it would to this grower be cheaper than the first cost of pine, and the bench bottoms of pecky cypress would last much longer.

FERNS.

How long should young ferns be topped back? Mine are in 3-inch pots now. I want to plant them on a bench for the summer months, put them in 6-inch and 7-inch pots early in autumn and have them ready for October sale. The varieties are Scottii and Piersoni. M. S.

It is customary to cut back the old fronds of nephrolepis to about six inches above the ground at the time they are planted out on the bench, and at the same time they should be examined carefully for scale insects. The marks of the scale show plainly on the surface of the fronds in the form of light colored spots, and any leaves that look suspicious should be cut off entirely, as these insects will soon ruin the crop. Give the ferns plenty of light, and do not water the bench too heavily before the plants get a start, and if your 3-inch plants are in fair condition they should turn out some strong plants by October. W. H. T.

WISTARIA FOR EASTER.

I have some wistaria plants I would like to have ready for Easter sales. Will you kindly give me some information about them? How many weeks will it take to force them in, and what temperature? W. W.

Plants of Wistaria Sinensis should be brought into heat right away to have them in flower for Easter, as that holiday comes unusually early this year. Give them a sunny house with a temperature of 55 degrees at night. Syringe freely. It is unwise to subject them to hard forcing or the buds may drop. Move to a cooler house as the flower racemes start to open. C. W.

PLANTS FOR SUMMER.

Will you tell me if delphinium, platycodon, sweet william, campanula and poppy, if sowed in March in a coldframe, will bloom during the summer? F. W. M.

None of the plants named, which are either perennials or biennials, will flower the first year from seed, except it may be a few of the delphiniums. The grandiflorum, or Chinensis type of the last named will bloom. This is a very desirable variety, growing eighteen to twenty-four inches high and is perfectly hardy. All the varieties specified, if sown in March, will make splendid flowering plants for the following year, however.

We presume Campanula Medium, or Canterbury bells, are the particular kind desired. These and sweet williams are biennials and may be sown as late as June to secure good plants for the succeeding year. Probably the scarlet oriental poppy, Papaver orientale, is also the one needed. Sown in March, transplanted and kept well cultivated all summer, it will make nice plants by fall. All the varieties mentioned should be planted out where they are to flower not later than October 1 to secure good results. Canterbury bells are the least hardy and if the location is a bleak one they would be better placed in a coldframe in November and planted out where they are to bloom early in April. W. N. CRAIG.

AN INTERESTING PLANT.

Through the middle west there are springing up, and flourishing, many up-to-date greenhouse establishments, among the most modern of which may be mentioned the establishment illustrated in this issue, that of the South Bend Floral Co., South Bend, Ind., of which Irving Gingrich is manager. The plant now contains 35,000 square feet of glass, devoted largely to the growing of cut flowers and plants for the retail trade, but a wholesale business is done in carnation and chrysanthemum cuttings and cannas.

There are a number of interesting features about the place. The exterior view shows the Wittbold sprinkling system in the field in the foreground. The three houses to the right comprise a new addition just completed, using the King truss system. The potting shed is shown running north and south. The heat is furnished by an eighty horse-power Bonsen boiler, furnished by the Lyons Bros. Boiler Co., Chicago.

Another view shows the construction of the new concrete benches in several stages of erection. The starting point is the frame, consisting of two 1-inch pipe legs and ½-inch cross supports. In describing the construction Mr. Gingrich said: "The corners, or uprights, were bent with forge and anvil. The legs are imbedded in cement, a hole being made with a post-hole augur for insertion of the concrete and the frame pounded into it with a maul. The heating pipes are placed on hangers clamped to the 1-inch legs. After the frames are erected two 2-inch planks are run lengthwise under the ½-inch cross supports. The framework for the concrete consists of 1x6 boards five feet long. Into these boards are driven sixpenny finishing nails six inches apart. These boards are merely tacked to the plank to keep them in position. The boards being in position, a 2½-inch strip is nailed lengthwise so as to project above the bottom one and one-half inches. This done, newspapers are covered over the board bottom to prevent the concrete from adhering to the boards. Then 18-inch chicken netting with a 2-inch mesh is rolled into position and two runs of ⅜-inch round iron strung along the full length of the bench. Spools 1x1½ inches, drilled through the center, are placed over the sixpenny nails. The benches are then ready for the concrete, which is mixed in the proportion of three to one, using the best grade of Portland cement. We have found that wet cement makes a tougher bottom than when used rather dry, as in the manufacture of cement walks or walls where heavy tamping is the practice. After the cement has been see-sawed properly a trowel is used to make a perfectly smooth surface and to prevent the water from soaking into the cement and injuring the re-inforcement. In from two to three days the cement is sufficiently set to permit the staging being removed.

Carnation House of South Bend Floral Co., South Bend, Ind.

The spools, however, are left in a day or two longer and then punched out with a stick and mallet. A bench constructed in this fashion gives perfect drainage. For sides we use 2x6 planks bored to receive the upright ½-inch pipe. The ends of the planks are screwed together with 2x5 ½-inch galvanized plates, which are punched in the local factory.

"Such benches as we will make in the future will contain three ½-inch rods running lengthwise of the bench, as the ⅜-inch rods are just a trifle weak when the legs are spaced four feet apart. Should the legs be spaced three feet apart we believe that the rods could be eliminated. This, however, would not be economical, as the rods are cheaper than the frames. The total cost of benches constructed in this manner is approximately 12 cents per square foot ready for the soil."

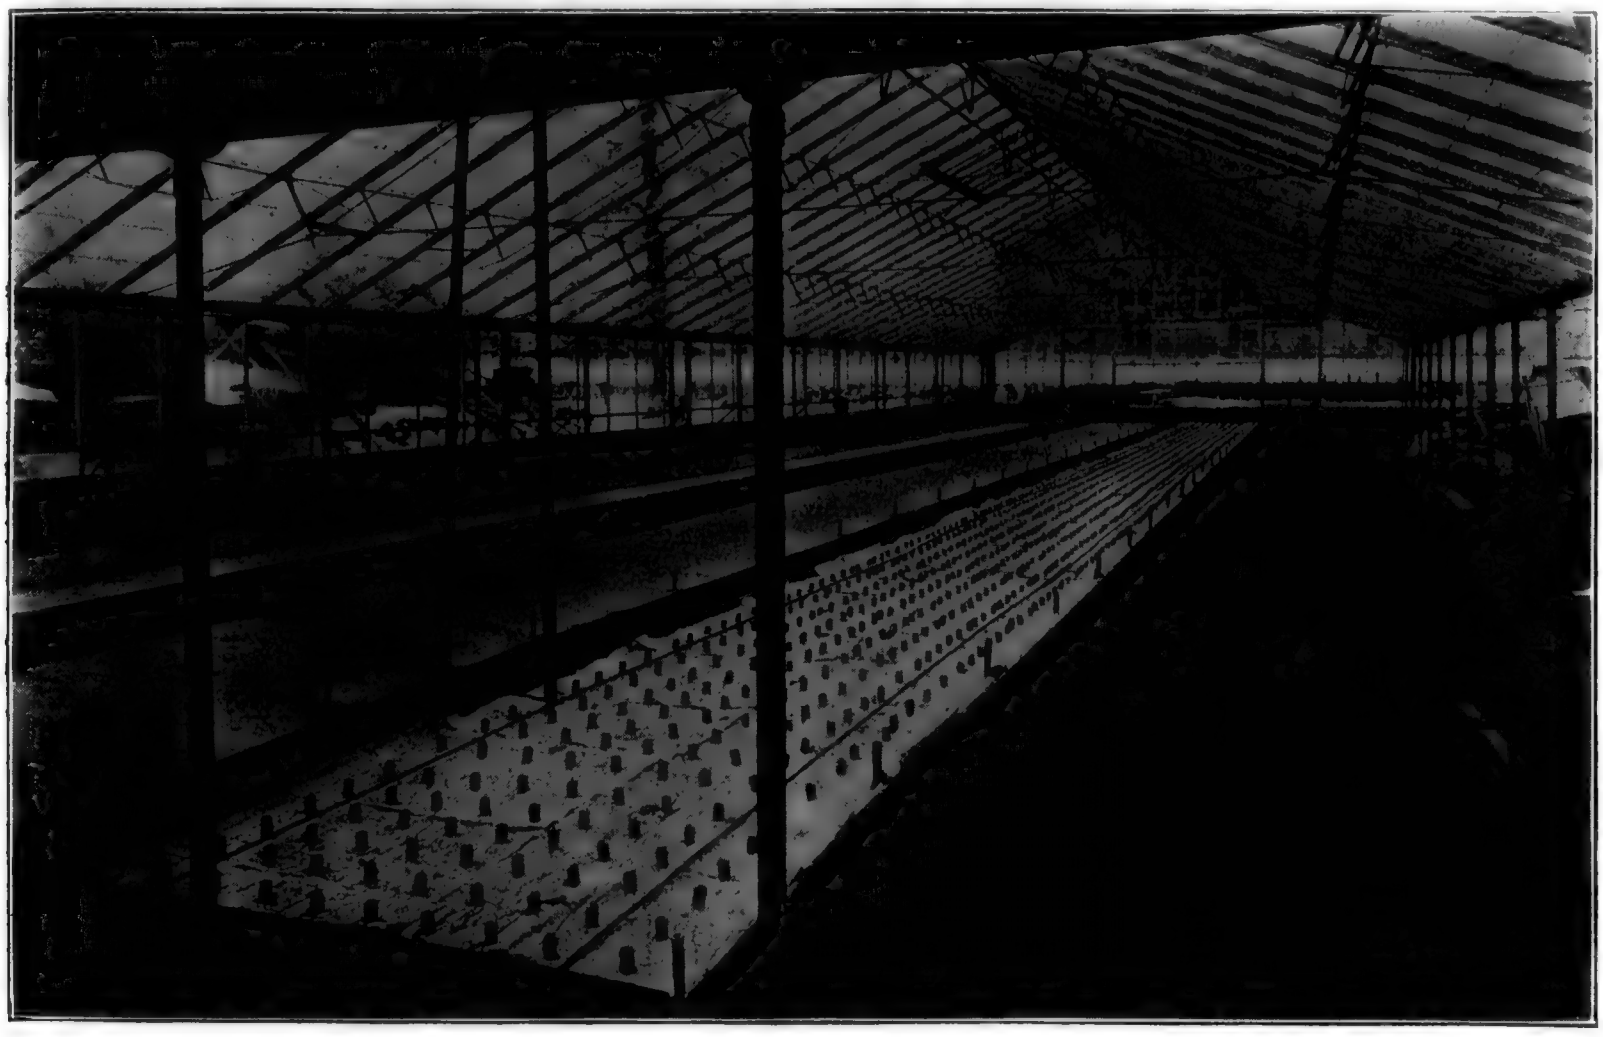
The smaller picture shows a carnation house, 37x206. The roof bars are approximately twenty feet long to the south and twenty-four feet on the north, these lengths making sixteen feet to the ridge. Mr. Gingrich says: "We are rather prejudiced against too wide a house, as repairs to the glass cannot readily be made. Our new houses are twenty-nine and one-half feet wide, even-span, using up without waste 16-foot bars. The ridge is fourteen feet from the walk, the gutters seven feet. This pitch allows the sun to enter all the houses without casting any shade on the shortest day in the year. This roof has supported a snow fall of six inches, breaking through only in two places where the trussing plates were too loose. The glass used in the new houses is 16x24, the bars being spaced twenty-four and five-eighths inches on centers.

"As an experiment we are using the Wittbold sprinkler in our carnation house, using the ½-inch nozzles. We use this only from spring until dark weather in the autumn, as this is the period when watering is most likely to be neglected. We are satisfied that with judicious use, the automatic watering device will supersede the hose. The use of this sprinkling system not only waters the plants, but throws the water with sufficient force to keep down red spider, which is the worst enemy a carnation grower has to contend with. By the use of this device the watering can be done early in the morning, as soon as the flowers have been taken off the plants, and fifteen to twenty minutes is sufficient to water the entire house, so that ample time is given every plant to dry off before night, thus avoiding rust. During the winter months we still use the hose, although next season we shall equip one bench with smaller nozzles and attempt to use the mechanical watering throughout the season. What the results will be is at present mere conjecture."

GROWING ASTERS FOR SEED.

The trade has for some years watched with interest the efforts of James Vick's Sons to make a commercial success of the growing of aster seed at Rochester, N. Y., and it is a pleasure to everyone that they have had the courage to persevere in the face of many difficulties. Of these obstacles to the success finally achieved the firm speaks as follows in its new illustrated aster list, just issued:

"When Admiral Farragut issued his famous command: 'Damn the torpedoes; go ahead!' he expressed a determination to be checked by no obstacle which by any possibility could be overcome. That was a critical moment for Admiral Farragut; but, like similar crises in the lives of every person, the determination to go ahead made all the difference between success and failure.



"Such crises have occurred time and again in our work of specializing in asters. Obstacles almost impassable have appeared again and again. It has required infinite patience to work year after year for results which might in the end, after all our pains, prove worthless. More than once we have almost lost, by flood or drought, a strain upon which we had spent years of anxious effort. Then the cost, with every ounce of our aster seed actually costing us twice as much as others were asking for seed grown in Europe and California, it has required no small amount of courage to risk thousands of dollars in aster crops, when in the end the public might possibly turn aside to buy cheap seed. Other difficulties, which only experienced seed growers could appreciate, have presented themselves at every point. We have seen other growers give up the struggle, and the question has often forced itself upon us: 'Shall we, too, choose a less perilous course?' But each time we have considered the wonderful possibilities for development in the flower itself, and, besides, we have felt confident that some day flower-loving Americans would bestow upon this glorious queen of flowers the admiration which she so richly deserves.

"Success, they say, comes to those who wait. How rich a measure of success has crowned our effort as a result of our perseverance may be seen from the fact that, with ever-growing acreage and steadily increasing crops of aster seed, the demand for some varieties has continually been in excess of the amounts we could spare. But, after all, the best tribute to our success is the fact that Vick's asters at present have a reputation for superior quality which is world wide."

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

Over 100 years ago the large flowered chrysanthemum was introduced into Europe by M. P. Blancard, whose granddaughters are now said to be in poor health and straitened circumstances. A fund is being raised for their relief, subscriptions to which are to be sent to the foreign secretary of the N. C. S., C. Harman Payne, 141 Wallmeadow road, Catford S. E.

It is said the favorite flower of Queen Alexandra is the American type of winter flowering carnation and the cultivation and profit therefrom has received a substantial stimulus in consequence. Certainly the demand is rapidly increasing and prices are at a profitable level. The fact of carnations loving a dry and rarified atmosphere, such as prevails in America, is amply demonstrated in England by the finest blooms coming from those plants cultivated at a high altitude, where the air is much drier and clearer than in low districts. The reason of American carnations being so much superior to the best English sorts is undoubtedly the dryer and more congenial atmospheric conditions in America.

The building of glass houses continues apace, and probably never in the history of British market gardening has there been such an increase of market fruit grown in glass structures. Tomatoes are the principal increase. Although some few growers are going more and more into vegetable culture, the bulk of the houses being built are single-span thirty feet wide tomato houses. Taking all through the season tomatoes were a profitable crop. If the same level is maintained during the next four or five years the growers, who have lately invested so heavily in glass, will have no cause to regret their venture.

Greenhouse timber has considerably advanced in price during the last year. This coupled with the advance in price of glass, will have the effect of somewhat checking the further erection of extensive glass ranges. Although it appears our horticultural building firms have on hand heavy stocks of greenhouse timber and glass, the advance in price generally is in the cheaper woods for commercial houses; but it is reported some heavy contracts are on hand for the erection of private glass ranges in the way of conservatories, winter gardens, orchard houses, etc. No advance has occurred, although it is anticipated a rise in price will take place at no distant date.

A disastrous frost has occurred in the south of France, destroying much of the early crops of flowers which are usually sent in immense quantities to the London market. The French growers' loss is heralded with joy by the English bulb forcer, such loss usually making for high or low prices in forced bulb stock on the English markets. On an average the cut bulb blooms are making fair prices, sufficient to prevent loss in the cultivation of Dutch bulbs. J. B.

VENTILATION.

As the days begin to lengthen and grow sunnier, both of which we like, more care should be taken about ventilating and lowering the fires during the day, lest the temperature should run too high, which would soon lower the quality of your blooms, as well as shorten the season. Every grower, or very nearly every one, wishes to have good blooms still on at Easter, if possible, and to do so your previous painstaking care must not be abated at all, or the quality will not be what you wish at that time, or they will be gone entirely if the weather gets warm too early.

The person who is growing violets for the first time may naturally be led to think that he is giving them better care than he is; for of course they will feel the approaching spring and grow more freely than they did previous to the holiday season, especially if the temperature is allowed to get too high. It is much safer to run your house too low than too high. Every one has to use his good judgment, and one can lay down no hard and fast rule to go by; still about 10 degrees above freezing is about the safest point to keep them. If the day is bright you will unavoidably run up some, but shut off part or all of the coils, ventilate and so hold down the temperature, thereby keeping your plants firm, dark colored and stocky, and prevent their making a quick, soft growth and running out of bloom early in the season.

Another thing, if you do not watch them closely, it is easy for the aphis, both green and black, to get a start before you notice it at this time, as the plants do not always show it immediately.

Ventilating is one of the things that I have frequently referred to and a subject that is ever before us, and yet I have seen houses that have suffered from an improper application of it. If there is anything that violets not only like but absolutely require, it is fresh air, and plenty of it, and always. So don't forget to give them all that is possible. Of course it means lots of work, looking after your ventilators; but then, there is lots of work to anything that you really make a success of, "don't you know?" If you find yourself handicapped in ventilating as you wish, because you are only growing a few, perhaps, in a house with other stock, see now, in placing for next season, if you cannot arrange things so that you can give them a small house, or frame, to themselves, so that you can regulate the temperature to their best health and needs. CARNATIONS

CARNATIONS OUTDOORS.

Please tell me the best carnations for outdoor blooming in summer; also temperature for same in the house.

D. M. S.

For summer blooming I would suggest the following varieties: White, The Queen, Indiana Market, Moonlight; light pink, Beatrice, Fair Maid, Enchantress; bright pink, Wm. Scott, Ethel Crocker; red, G. H. Crane. You can grow all these with good success indoors in the winter in 50 degrees or 52 degrees, except Crocker. This is not a first-class winter variety, though we did have splendid success with it the first three winters we grew it. It requires 55 degrees in the winter. A. F. J. B.

RED SPIDER.

In a separate package we send a few leaves of some of our carnation plants. We have them put in solid benches, 6x10, running crossways of our house. In the middle of these beds we find one bed of which the north half are all like the sample. It is confined to this one bed. We don't know whether they have spider, or rust, or what it might be. S. F. Co.

The carnation branches you sent were literally covered with red spider, and if the whole bed is as bad as these branches were I would advise you to pull them out at once and burn them. Plants that are so badly infested will not do much this season, and if you keep them in the house they will be sure to spread to your other beds before you can exterminate them. Do not propagate from these plants, lest you get the pest started in your propagating bench, where it will spread very rapidly and do great damage.

After removing these infested plants, and the soil, I would advise you to wash down all the woodwork and drench the path next to the bed. Syringe the beds on each side next to that one several times during the next couple of weeks to make sure that the pest does not start anew. A. F. J. B.

LEAF-SPOT.

You will find enclosed an Enchantress carnation shoot which is dead on the ends of the leaves. This is general all over the house, spoiling some of the buds and flowers. It only appears in one house. The other houses are all right and all have the same kind of soil. Can you tell me what to do for them?

J. A. F. & S.

The specimen you forwarded was too dried up for me to make out exactly the disease that is causing your trouble, but no doubt it is one of the leaf-spot diseases, and, as they are all closely related and need pretty much the same treatment, I will proceed on that presumption. No doubt the long-continued dark weather is responsible for its appearance, and if you failed to ventilate freely and apply such preventives as sulphur on your steam-pipes it would spread quickly through the house. The fact that it appears in one house and not in the others does not prove anything, save that the conditions in the one house were favorable to the disease and not in the others.

Drop a pinch of sulphur on one of the steam-pipes every six feet or so. Spray the plants twice each week with formalin, diluted with water, one to 500. Give all the air you can and run the temperature even. It would be well to pick off all the diseased leaves, to begin with, and burn them. Water carefully, and in fact, do all you can to promote a sturdy growth. Bordeaux mixture is also a good remedy, but it spots the growth so much and is not so desirable as formalin to use on plants that are blooming.

A. F. J. B.

ROTATING CARNATIONS.

Is it a bad plan to set out this season's carnations in the same patch of ground as this winter's benched carnations were in last summer? The latter have a bad case of stem-rot and other diseases. C. A. M.

The fact that your plants suffered from stem-rot in the house does not necessarily prove that the ground in which your plants grew last summer is inoculated with the fungus. It is quite possible that the disease was in the soil in which you planted in the house, and if your plants were practically free from it while in the field, then the soil in the field was most likely free from it.

Most carnation specialists make it a rule nowadays to rotate their planting as far as practical, and plant carnations on the same ground only every second season, even though there may be no sign of stem-rot. When that disease appears no carnations are planted in that particular territory for several seasons. It would surely recur in much worse form from year to year if carnations were planted each season. If you have plenty of suitable ground then by all means plant your carnations in a different spot this season, and each summer plant where no carnations were growing the season before. A. F. J. B.

FOR SUMMER BLOOM.

Is Queen Louise a good carnation for outdoor flowering? Can it be flowered successfully by the following treatment? Propagate in January, February or March, plant out in summer, pot them in 4-inch pots and carry them over winter in frames; then plant out the following summer for the cut blooms. Please mention other varieties that make good summer bloomers in different colors and give best treatment for Maryland climate. A. R. W.

We have never grown Queen Louise for summer blooming and hardly think it would be as good for that purpose as Flora Hill or Indiana Market. Both of these stand hot weather well and start to bloom earlier in autumn. The Queen ought to prove a good one, too. In other colors I would mention: Fair Maid and Beatrice in light pink; E. Crocker and Wm. Scott in deep pink; G. H. Crane in red. Of the newer kinds White Perfection, Candace and Victory ought to prove good varieties to grow for summer blooms.

The plan you suggest should work all right if carefully followed. I would suggest propagating as late as you can and get the plants established in small pots before planting out. The idea is to have small plants to lift in autumn.

Carnation Afterglow.

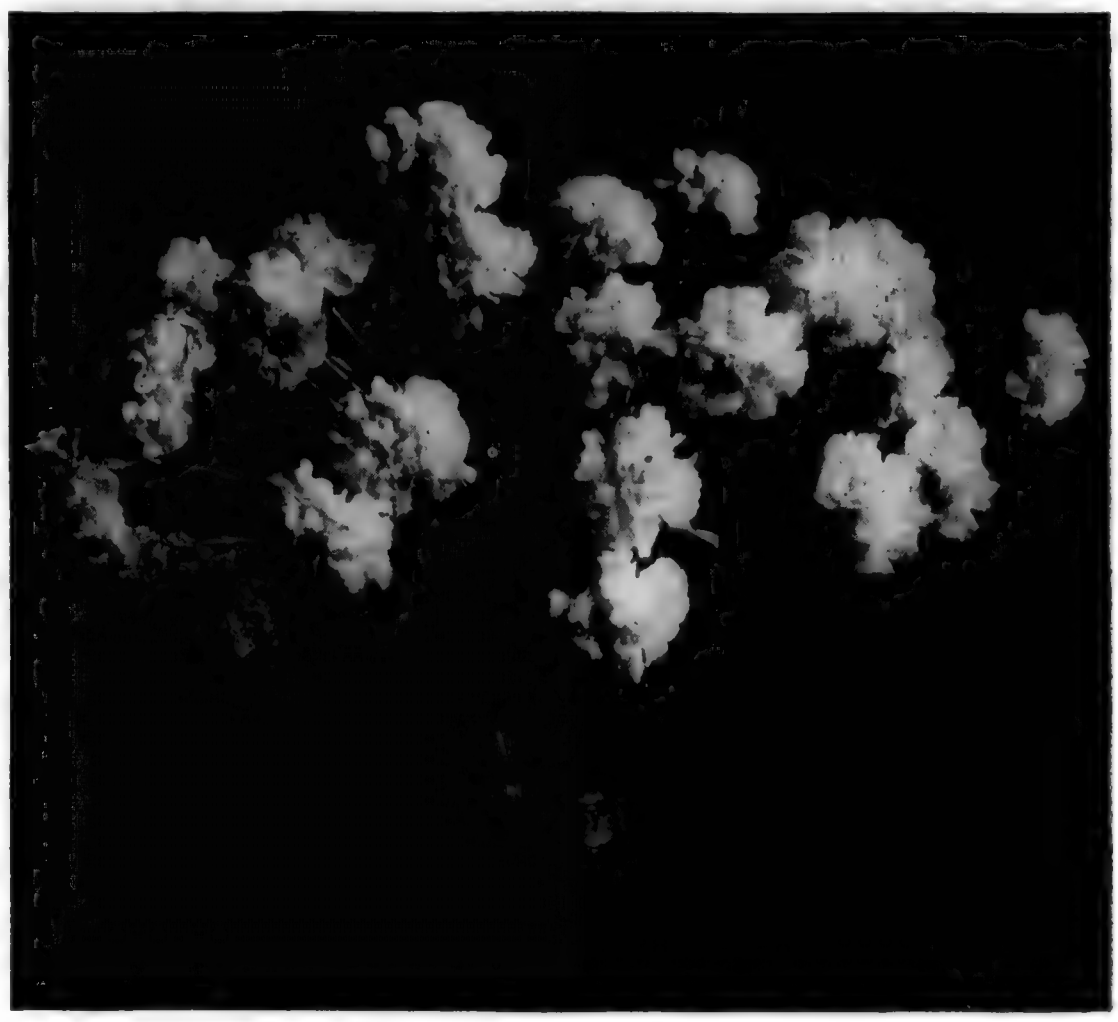
Plants that are rather below the average of what you like to house for winter blooming will prove better stock for this purpose than large plants would. They will transplant better in the spring and the growth, being younger, will start off quicker. Keep all the blooming shoots topped back until they are established again in the field.

In your climate, the plants ought to winter first rate in a coldframe or a cold house. Personally, I have never had much use for coldframes or hotbed frames, though I admit that for some few things they are excellent. They are almost as expensive as a house, and are a lot more work for the one caring for the stock, besides being out in the weather and subject to hard freezing, etc.

If you have a small house which you can run near 40 degrees it will be just the place for your plants to winter. Growth will be slow and you can plant out very early in the spring, the earlier the better. There will be a tendency to bloom, as spring approaches, and if you can get them planted out before this progresses too far the plants will be better for it. If they seem to be starting up a heavy crop of blooming shoots, then cut out the most forward ones in order to encourage steady blooming through the season. Plant them where you can water them in dry weather and mulch them with stable litter before hot weather sets in. A. F. J. B.

MR. HAINES' EXPERIENCE.

[The address of John E. Haines, Bethlehem, Pa., before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, February 5, 1907.]



John Welsh Young, a few weeks ago, wrote to me, urging me to make a speech, or write up something on carnations, to deliver before you this evening. I appreciated his kindness, but I really hesitated to comply with his wishes, as speaking in public is a new venture for me and a career of speech-making, at my age, may not be as successful as my experience in raising carnations has been. But I have concluded to give you my experience in growing the divine flower, the carnation, and tell you how I drifted into this line of business at my advanced age.

Early Occupation.

After serving a period in the Civil War, I learned the trade of moulding, which trade I followed until, owing to poor health, I was compelled to change my occupation. I became a retail oil merchant and later in connection with this I also had a few acres of land which I devoted to trucking. Finally, at 48 years of age, I sold the oil business to the Standard Oil Co.

Then I built one greenhouse, 22x80, to raise lettuce and radishes. Meanwhile, I kept on trucking, raising all kinds of vegetables, and am doing the same today. My lettuce crop was successful the first year and the following year I put up another house of the same size. The lettuce crop was again successful and in two years more I erected three more houses. Florists began to pay me visits and praise my good work in lettuce growing, but telling me that my good success with lettuce had about reached its limit and I would find out that succeeding crops would not always reach this same standard. The following year, I grew 50,000 lettuce. It was not quite as good as it had been in previous years, but it was not bad.

At this period I became deeply interested in the florists' trade papers and devoted most of my spare time to reading them. I sent to the government for seeds and among the collection was a packet of carnation seed. I again raised some lettuce and began raising a few flowering plants, a few roses, carnations, etc. Lettuce was not a success that year, but the flowers did very well. This increased my interest in flowers.

Carnation White Lawson Grown by Breitmeyer's Sons, Mt. Clemens, Mich.

With the florists' help which I had hired I commenced experimenting on the stock I received from the government and a few standards I had purchased. The government stock came mostly in bullheads and single blooms. There were also a few fine plants, possessing fine stems and vigorous growths among them. We hybridized these with the following standards: Jubilee, Crane, Wm. Scott, Lizzie McGowan, New York, Albertina, etc. I was successful. I got numerous good ones, would raise them for a while, discover some bad trait, then discard them. I kept on trying and discarding, until I secured enough stock of seedlings of my own, which, compared with the standard varieties I had on the place, were superior to those in my opinion.

Visits Exhibitions.

Seeing glowing accounts in the papers of the flower shows held at various places, I decided to visit a show and see how my carnations compared with those of others. The first show I attended was at Brooklyn. I enjoyed my first visit at the show and found, to my delight, that my carnations were at least good enough to exhibit. Then I discarded most other stock and devoted my space, which I kept increasing a little year by year, to seedlings of my own raising. Lettuce was a dead member. I found the growing of the carnation more interesting, and today, you see, I am still making a specialty of raising seedlings; a work which gives me extreme pleasure. I have visited some shows each year and at times have come home feeling overjoyed with success and at other times disappointed. You florists, no doubt, have had similar experiences. We all leave home feeling confident that our flowers cannot be beaten, but when we get there we see such fine displays that certainly open our eyes. Every time, I come home, however, with renewed courage and aroused ambition to do better.

Methods of Culture.

As to the treatment of the carnation; first, I began by watering my plants at night. My reason for doing this was as follows: Early in the morning, after a good rainfall at night, I had a habit of taking a walk into my truckpatch. Everything looked so fresh and crisp, that it seemed to me, I could almost see exactly how much things had grown overnight. I concluded, the night-watering would be the best method and for a while followed my method. The plants were doing finely. All florists, however, who came to visit me, and papers, all gave instructions for watering in the morning and I finally changed to the general method of watering, though I must say, I did not see a decided difference.

By attending the different conventions, club meetings, and reading essays by various writers, I discovered that my way of growing the carantion was not so different from other florists' methods. I gradually learn more, get new ideas talking to different florists and visiting other greenhouse establishments.

The question, "How do you get such long, strong stems on your carnations?" is so often put to me. As I have said before, my methods are not different from others. I claim it is in the varieties I grow. In the other standard varieties I had been growing I could see no difference in that respect.

The soil on my place is a heavy clay. I prepare it by making compost. I have never had experience in growing carnations in a sandy soil, but I believe it can also be prepared in compost to grow carnations equal to those grown in clay soil. It may even do better; I cannot tell.

In feeding the plants, I begin as soon as I have fire in the house. I feed them lightly now and then and keep them on the move. I do not use the liquid manure. I use sheep manure, bone flour, air-slaked lime and wood ashes.

I have not kept a night fireman, except on extremely cold nights and run my house between 45 degrees and 52 degrees. In one of my houses I have taken out the partition on one side for growing violets. The temperature of this place is usually about 45 degrees when the others are 50 degrees. Here I always have been growing my namesake. I find that in this house the best flowers are produced and yet the plants are very prolific.

Insects and Diseases.

The troubles connected with the raising of this flower I have also met with and have been kept busy fighting. One of these troubles at one time was stem-rot, as they call it. I will not undertake to say what the cause of it is, or the remedy. There are many different opinions on this great question. I will give you the experience I had one year in this line. In the autumn I buried vegetables, such as turnips, radishes, beets, etc. In the spring, when the ground was prepared for planting, there were still, in a certain patch, vegetables that had either rotted or frozen, also some salt hay, which had been used for covering bulbs, and tomato vines grown the previous year. Here, I planted my young stock of carnations. The plants raised on this patch suffered with stem-rot. It was so peculiar, only these plants were infected. Those which did not get it in the field, got it after planting in. This taught me that I must be very careful not to have any decaying matter or fermented matter around the place. I have been very strict in the matter of cleanliness. Cleanliness is next to godliness. All refuse must be taken away immediately and surroundings must be kept sweet and clean. I have used air-slaked lime occasionally for this purpose.

Another trouble is that dreadful disease, rust. From all my past experience I find that by taking the best of care of the plants, beginning at the time of planting-in and using all the precautions that would be used if they were infected right along, it will seldom appear at all. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. My plants are watched closely and if any plants show the least symptoms of it the infected leaves are at once taken off.

To avoid the much hated thrips and greenfly, the plants are sprayed with nicoticide, say, once a week; but precaution is used in choosing a bright day for the work. I also begin this treatment as soon as the plants are put into the house. I find this treatment of plants more successful than the method of smoking I used in previous years. Since the present treatment has been used I am molested very little with these pests.

These are some of my experiences. It is impossible for me to relate all of the little details. I feel that there is still a great deal for me to learn. My interest is at its highest point. My aim is to do better each year. I hope to meet you often in the future, to hear your experiences and views on the various questions. This way of meeting to tell each others' views and visiting each others' places, I believe, will lead to a grand advancement in the culture of the carnation.

NEW ORLEANS.

Convention Plans.

February 15 and 16 are the dates fixed for the 1907 convention of the Society of Southern Florists in this city, and the local members and florists generally are preparing to make the occasion a big success. Invitations have been printed and sent out notifying florists all over the south and through the country generally that the convention will meet at the time mentioned, and urgent steps will be taken to guarantee a big attendance. The time fixed is immediately after Mardi Gras, and it is thought that placing the date then will assure the attendance of many who would not otherwise attend. First Vice-president C. W. Eichling, who has charge of the arrangements, announces that R. Lockerbie has appointed the following on his subcommittee: Messrs. Steckler, Newsham, Papworth, Chopin, Lapouyade, Menard, Paul and Otto Abele and others.

Preparations are being made to see that all visitors will be assured of satisfactory quarters during their stay here, Joseph Steckler having this matter in charge. A list of hotels and rooming-houses will be published and announcement will shortly be made of the full program. The prospects are that the trade exhibit will be quite extensive. The subjects which will be discussed at the meeting will be of general interest. This will be the first convention the Society of Southern Florists has ever held and efforts are all the more being made to guarantee a fitting reception being given by the city.

Various Notes.

Balls and weddings are keeping some florists busy. Complaints are made that flowers coming from the north arrive in a bad condition. The markets for plants will soon open. This winter has been unusually warm. Many florists are ready with any quantity of blooming stuff.

J. Menard is building large frames covered with sashes to protect his Asparagus plumosus. At J. Newsham's and W. C. Withers', who are growing ferns in quantity, we have noticed the same accommodation for their stock. They are cheaper than greenhouses, only a flow and a return hot water pipe being used inside.

F. Gruza is raising Marechal Niel roses in quantity. They are grafted on wild stocks. He says he cannot grow enough to supply the demand.

J. St. Mard is lifting from the open ground a few large plants of Washingtonia filifera.

J. A. Bauer, of Paducah, Ky., was in town and sold a few carloads of his pots. M. M. L.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held Tuesday evening, January 29, President Howard Nichols presiding. A fine lot of cyclamen plants were on exhibition. Joseph Bradley, gardener to Sidenburgh Hastings, won the prize with three excellent yearling plants. Howard Nichols offers a prize for the best twelve roses other than American Beauties for the February meeting. H. C. Griffin, of Tarrytown, was elected an honorary member. Two of the essays on "Vegetables" that were in competition for the Peter Henderson prize at the autumn show were read, and a lively discussion followed. The authors of the essays were George Standen and C. Newton.

Resolutions of sympathy were read and adopted on the death of John Egan, one of the charter members of the society. Mr. Egan was one of the pioneers, and one of the most able gardeners in this section. For many years he was in charge of the Gurney estate at Irvington, but latterly conducted a business in Tarrytown. He was one of the best grape growers in his day, and his name was associated with the production of many things in floriculture.

Resolutions of condolence to Claude Wilson, Dobb's Ferry, on the death of his son, were also read. D. McF.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

On Monday a western blizzard arrived. The ground hog's view of his shadow on Saturday was verified and the long, cold winter seems to have begun. The convention weather has certainly followed us from Canada. The worst storm of the year is raging, cars are blocked, the temperature is falling rapidly, and the outlook is blue and white as this letter starts for Chicago.

Business has been unsatisfactory for a week. Prices have been high, stock scarce and retail demand below the normal. The prospect for the present week is not encouraging. The finest Beauties still command from $9 to $12 a dozen, but they are few and far between. The best Maids and Brides sold readily at from $15 to $20 per hundred, but there were few of them. Prices a year ago were about half of those now prevailing. A good deal of pessimistic comment comes from the growers. Even with such excellent prices, the lack of supply is the serious consideration.

There are plenty of carnations and values have fallen fifty per cent from the high figures of two weeks ago. Orchids are abundant, but the call for them continues, not only locally but from all parts of the country. It looks as if the prospective brides had combined everywhere to carry orchid bouquets or postpone the wedding ceremonies. Gardenias maintain their popularity. Valley is coming in freely. Some fine stock from the Dale Estate at Brampton, Can., is in evidence on Twenty-eighth street. There is an oversupply of bulbous stock and plenty of smilax and adiantum. Lilac is fine and popular. Lilies are scarce and high, and violets have settled down to a steady gait, at 50 cents to $1 per hundred, where they are likely to hold until Easter.

Lent begins next week Wednesday, but it will not even jar the market. The day of its potency is past. Eight weeks from Sunday is Easter. It seems hard to realize it tonight, with the blizzard raging and the extremities tingling from the icy grasp of old Jack Frost. But there is no time to be lost in preparing for the great spring festival and everyone is alert and enterprising in the advance bookings and engagements for the grand stock grown on every hand by the expert plantsmen of this vicinity. As to Lent, the period of sackcloth and ashes is crowded with balls, dances, dinners and weddings, the social and society columns of the local papers being filled with coming functions reaching far into the springtime.

Various Notes.

Many are planning already for the rose show, a month hence in Washington. The Rose Society may well prepare for a record crowd this spring, for more will attend its meeting from New York than ever before and exhibits from this center will be a surprise in numbers and excellence. The Washington Florists' Club will repeat its triumph when it entertained the S. A. F. and will demonstrate to carnationists the excellence of their choice for the convention of 1908.

Walter Sheridan is already receiving encouraging news as to the New York Club's annual dinner at the St. Denis hotel, Saturday evening, February 23, An early acceptance of the invitation by the club members will be greatly appreciated by the committee. An attendance of less than 100 will be no credit to this prosperous organization.

The Glen Cove dinner last Wednesday was a fine success. It was the second annual and over fifty sat down to a 4 o'clock dinner that was greatly appreciated. President McKenzie was the toast-master and a good one. During the festivities the society's medals were distributed to the winners in the twelve months' competition. The gold medal was won by S. J. Trepess, the silver by C. Myers and the bronze by Alex. McKenzie. Among the visitors were John Low, of Peter Henderson & Co.; The Rickards brothers; W. F. Ross, of the F. R. Pierson Co.; Wm. Scott, of Elmsford; George Burnett and Mr. Sperling, of New York; J. Cook, of Thorburn's, and Mr. Conine, of Stratford, N. Y. Mr. Woodlin, with the Rickards brothers, made melody. Speech and song held the happy company until a late hour and decorations of cyclamen, azaleas, freesias and Winsor carnations made the room beautiful.

The Orange smoker on Friday evening was well attended, notwithstanding sloppy weather. All the old-timers were there and the hilarity lasted until the wee sma' hours. About fifty, including several visitors from New York and adjacent towns, were present. The society held its regular meeting and its reports indicate progress and prosperity. Messrs. Berry, Ross and Manda judged the excellent exhibits. The program was long and interesting and included song, oratory and dramatic exhibition by local talent that was highly appreciated. The exhibits included a fine collection of orchids, from the Julius Roehrs Co., a vase of Carnation Winsor, from the F. R. Pierson Co.; a grand specimen plant of Cattleya Schrœderiana with twenty-five flowers, from Sidney Austin Colgate, Wm. Reed, gardener; a pan of a new pink hyacinth, a vase of Lawson and Rob Roy carnations from Chas. Hathaway; a fine plant of Euphorbia Jacquiniæflora, from Peter Duff, and a vase of carnation seedlings from Henry Hornacker. The smoker was up to the excellent record of the society for its annual celebrations and was greatly enjoyed by all.

The announcement is made of the engagement of Julius Roehrs, Jr., of Rutherford, to one of Brooklyn's fair ladies, the daughter of a well known florist. Congratulations are overwhelming the popular young folks in advance of the wedding bells.

The meeting of the National Gardeners' Society was held last week at the American Institute, and the long and excellent program was completed successfully with an attendance of 100 gardeners, many of them men of national reputation. John Shore's address on "The Dignity of the Gardeners' Profession" was the gem of the meeting. President Hunter conducted the meeting with commendable enthusiasm.

A week ago Mr. Tokuda, of the Yokohama Nursery Co., of Tokio, arrived in New York preparatory to a tour of the country, taking the place of B. Suzuki, who remains in the Island kingdom.

John Seligman & Co. are receiving large quantities of southern grown Asparagus plumosus and some fine Golden Gate roses from their Virginia growers.

William Hockland, of the New York Cut Flower Co., in the Coogan building, will be married February 11 to a New York lady. They will spend their honeymoon in Washington.

We are, indeed, pleased with the results obtained from our advertisement in as many of our best customers favored us with their orders after reading our advertisement in your paper.

Very truly yours,

IONIA POTTERY CO.

Ionia, Mich.
February 4, 1907.

The long established business known as LaRochelle, at Eighth avenue and Twenty-first street, was sold last week to Mr. Ficket, formerly with W. H. Traendly, at Sixth avenue and Seventeenth street. The stand is an excellent one and has been utilized by the old firm for over thirty years.

Reed & Keller have two new inventions that appeal to florists, one an adjustable casket cover and the other a folding canopy.

The aftermath of the Toronto convention gives no discordant or uncertain sound. There are none but pleasant memories. One or two travelers were the subjects of popular jokes while crossing the frontier and the responsibility for them seems to rest on the shoulders of the man who can throw off such trouble as easily as a duck sheds water, Harry Bunyard. It is an unsafe venture to try to play practical jokes on the practical custom house officials of His Majesty.

Next Wednesday New Yorkers will have opportunity to again hear W. J. Lawrence, of Toronto, in his tenor melodies, the Toronto Choral Society, of which he is a member, giving a popular concert at Carnegie hall February 13. The New York Florists' Club is hoping he may be present at its meeting Monday evening, February 11. This is an important occasion and a large attendance is requested. Many matters of interest are to be discussed and much of the prosperity of the year depends upon this evening's discussion. Preliminary meetings have already been held by the outing committee. Bowling club night, or afternoon, will be determined and final arrangements as to the club's annual dinner completed. Some fine exhibits are promised and, all things considered, the evening should be one of the best of the year. There will be music by "the team" and echoes from the Canadian convention. You can't afford to miss it.

The victims of the grip are all convalescing. The affliction has been widespread. The popular secretary of the Rose Society, Benj. Hammond, was one of the sufferers.

McKinley day was not observed as we hoped and anticipated. Few carnations were worn in the streets and even the florists themselves failed largely to create public notice by wearing the flower in memory of the martyred president. But there was a greater interest displayed than in 1906, and I predict another year will develop wider demonstration.

Julius Roehrs, Sr., after a severe attack of grip, has fully recovered and is able to visit his new orchid range daily.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

PAPER WHITES.

We want to grow some Paper Whites next season after mums are gone and would like to ask the following questions: Can we plant the bulbs in 3-inch flats and put them under a carnation bench by tacking paper around the bench to make it dark? How long will it take to bring them into bloom after they are brought into the light at 45 to 50 degrees at night? Will a 15-18 centimeter bulb produce two blooms per bulb?

R. & S.

While Paper White narcissi will grow and bloom in flats three inches deep, we prefer them an inch deeper. After boxing place on a cellar floor, frame or under a greenhouse bench. They do not need to be kept darkened so much as other narcissi; in fact, we have seen excellent ones grown in full light all the time. If placed under the bench and a strip of cloth or heavy paper is tacked along it they will come along nicely. Allow from five to six weeks for them to come into bloom after being placed on the bench in a night temperature of 50 degrees. If it is a mild winter they may come a little earlier, and if severely cold a trifle longer time may be needed. After February they will flower much earlier, only three to four weeks being needed.

DANVILLE, ILL.—The proprietors of the Plaza hotel are preparing to erect a greenhouse 20x240.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—W. W. Thompson & Sons are planning to erect a house 30x200 in the spring and follow it with others as the business develops.

DEVIL'S LAKE, N. D.—The greenhouse of P. J. Kersten was practically destroyed by fire January 19. The dwelling house adjoining was saved with difficulty.

TAMPICO, ILL.—Mary A. Wirth has retired from the business and has sold all her greenhouse material. The town proved too small to support a greenhouse.

E. NEUBERT, Wandsbek, near Hamburg, Germany, makes a specialty of the American sports of nephrolepis, including Whitmani, Piersoni, Elegantissima, Scottii and Barrowsii, issuing a price-list showing a splendid cut of the first named variety on its front cover.

THE REVIEW has more subscribers in the state of New York than in any other state in the Union.

ADVERTISING PAYS.

Please discontinue our 3½-inch double column advertisement of carnation cuttings. We had intended you to insert this only once, for we have been overwhelmed with orders. As our space for rooted cuttings is somewhat limited this year we cannot supply the quantities that we have in the past year. We will shortly send you new copy offering other stock.

COTTAGE GARDENS CO.

Queens, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1907.

As the advertisement in question stated quantities offered, a total of 66,500, it may fairly be said that business is good with the Cottage Gardens Co.

ILLINOIS ASSOCIATION.

Parties wishing to stage exhibits at the meeting of the Illinois State Florists' Association, to be held in Bloomington, February 19 and 20, will kindly apply to George A. Washburn, Bloomington, Ill., chairman of the exhibition committee, for space. A charge of $10 will be made for trade displays, supplies, etc. On space for cut flowers, plants, etc., there will be no charge. All stock sent to the chairman, express prepaid, will be properly staged and cared for during the meeting. A special committee will be appointed to pass on all exhibits. Everybody should send something and every florist in the state should attend. In addition to the benefit derived in a business way, we are assured a good time by the Bloomington brethren.

GLADIOLUS AMERICA.

We note in the REVIEW of January 31 the address of H. H. Groff before the American Breeders' Association, and particularly that part of his remarks pertaining to the origin of Gladiolus America. We think it rather late for Mr. Groff to come forward at this time and claim America as his production. This variety was exhibited by Frank Banning, from whom we bought the stock for four or five years. After we bought it we exhibited it very extensively during two summers and no one questioned its being a new variety. It seems to us that if Mr. Groff had had it in his collections for so many years, some one would have discovered that America was not a new variety. We had some correspondence with Mr. Groff a month or two ago regarding this matter, but his contentions were so absurd that we dropped the whole matter.

He seems to censure us for classifying it as a Childsi. We are well aware that it is not a full-blooded Childsi variety but there is more Childsi blood in it than anything else; therefore, we put it in that class. We cannot see how he can claim it as one of his hybrids, as all of the Groff's hybrids, as far as we have been able to test them and observe their growth, are very little if any different from a good strain of Lemonei hybrids, and if one would happen to get some good colors in the Groff's mixtures he would be pretty sure to be able to trace the same varieties in the hybrids that Messrs. V. Lemoine & Fils have been and are putting on the market, and we as gladiolus growers have failed so far to find any distinct species in the so-called Groff's hybrids.

Mr. Groff also contends in his article that the cormels from America do not mature anywhere except in Ohio. This is wrong, as we have grown them for two years on our own place on Long Island and the cormels mature as well as those of any variety that we have, and a large number of the one-year-old bulblets will bloom. Of course, the flowers will be small compared with the flowers from the larger and older bulbs. Another thing that seems absurd to us is that, if Mr. Groff had had this variety so many years, he was very slow in not selecting it out and putting it on the market as a variety of great merit, for it certainly is, and this fact cannot be disputed by anyone who knows the first thing about gladioli.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS.

STOCK SCARCE.

From one end of the country to the other there is a striking similarity in reports as to the condition of the market. We have had a most unusual season so far as weather conditions go. Not in years have there been three months of such continuously cloudy weather. In most sections it also has been warm and the rainfall has been far ahead of normal. Conditions have been most unfavorable to the production of cut flowers and markets everywhere are short. Through January roses have been especially scarce. Carnations, while not yielding anything like what is usually cut at this season, have done better than roses. To the growers increased prices as compared with last year have made up a part of what has been lost through lighter cuts, but it has been only a small part. Unless the spring season brings a return considerably above the ordinary this will not be an especially profitable season for growers of roses and carnations, or to the Rhinebeck violet growers, who are in the same boat. The growers of bulbous stock are profiting to some extent so far as better prices go.

VINES FOR WIND-BREAK.

I have a wind-break eight feet high, running north and south and east at west at right angles. I want to cover it with some self-supporting vine that will stand high winds, is hardy and will grow rapidly in a well-drained, sandy loam. Would Ampelopsis quinquefolia or A. Veitchii meet these conditions?

J. L. G.

Ampelopsis Veitchii, if used, needs some protection the first year, until established. We find this variety, however, kills back badly in severe winters. A. quinquefolia, the common woodbine, or its variety Engelmanni, would be probably the best clinging vine to use. Either of these will tear off sometimes and it would be well to give them a few supports. Wire staples can be used for this purpose. Clematis paniculata would cover the fence more quickly than anything else if upright strands of wire netting were fixed at three feet intervals for the vines to cling to. Netting a foot wide will answer. The clematis dies back pretty well each winter, but will speedily grow and cover the whole fence when warm weather comes. It makes a dense covering of foliage, is beautiful when in flower and its seeds are handsome all winter.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market is almost bare of roses. The receipts of Beauties are almost nothing at all. The growers, who should be cutting 1,500 to 2,000 Beauties per day, find themselves cutting 300 to 500, and of these the shorts are so poor they are of little use. The crops of Bride and Bridesmaid are little better, except that the quality is more satisfactory. Richmond seems to be giving a number of growers good cuts, compared with what other varieties are doing. The prices on roses are something extraordinary. Never in the history of this market have prices been so high for so long a period after Christmas. As a matter of fact, good roses are now bringing more than the prices asked at the holidays. Not only do the extra select command full holiday rates, but the shorts are bringing much more than they did for Christmas.

The carnation has had a week of splendid business. Receipts are quite large and last week the demand cleaned up everything at splendid prices. It is difficult to make a summary of what prices have been, but it is probably well within bounds to say that all kinds and conditions of carnations in the last week brought $1 per hundred more than they did a year ago at this time. The market has been well cleaned up every day and the result has been most satisfactory. This week starts with only a slight recession in demand and prices.

The shortage in roses and the high prices of carnations has had the result of turning demand to bulbous stock. Tulips are nothing extra in quality at this early date, but have been bringing excellent prices. Paper Whites and Romans are doing better than they usually do at this season. Valley is in demand and callas and longiflorum sell quickly. Sweet peas have arrived in considerable quantity and are a great help. Freesia also sells well.

If there is any item which is in oversupply it is the violet, both Hudson river and local stock. It seems that the retailers do not push violets the way they once did and few funeral pieces are made of them. The result is that the violet market has been dead on cold days and has had a brief season of activity when the weather has been favorable for street wear.

Practically all kinds of indoor greens are scarce. There is abundance of everything of hardy character.

Local trade is not especially active, but it seems that the shortage in stock, which is so pronounced among local growers, is also affecting the producers throughout the country. The result is that the whole Mississippi valley is calling upon Chicago for stock. We wish we had more of it for them.

Stock Frozen.

There are numerous complaints of stock having arrived frozen during the last week, and it is worth while noting that it was not always on the coldest days that accidents happened. The heaviest loss was on two shipments of orchids to C. W. McKellar. These came from Washington, D. C., and the value of the two lots was close to $200. The most numerous cases of complaint were with regard to the violet shipments from Rhinebeck. Some local lots of roses and carnations were frosted Monday morning.

Reinberg Buys Lilies

Several weeks ago the REVIEW reported that Peter Reinberg had decided to extend the range of his business by growing other things than roses and carnations, to which he had confined himself in the past. In pursuance of the new policy Leonard Kill has in the last week placed an order with William Hagemann, New York, for 30,000 lily bulbs for next season. A portion of these are Harrisii, for early forcing, but the bulk of the lot will be longiflorum multiflorum and longiflorum giganteum; these for cold storage and the later forcing, the idea being to have lilies all the year around after the first of this purchase of bulbs comes in.

Mr. Reinberg also is making plans to build a small range of violet houses this spring. It is stated this will be the only addition to the glass this year.

Wienhoeber Employees' Reception.

The employees of the E. Wienhoeber Co. gave their first annual reception at the Svithiod Club, 1768 Wrightwood avenue, on the evening of January 30. The rooms were handsomely decorated, with palms and cut flowers, and the attendance was 114 couples, among them being Mr. and Mrs. E. Wienhoeber and many of the wholesale and retail florists. The grand march was led by D. A. Robertson and wife. The music was by Goldsmith's orchestra. In the intermissions there were musical numbers in the club parlors. The committee in charge, which

GLASSWARE

We do not carry cut glass, or hand painted China, but we do carry a large line of Vases, Glass Baskets, etc., in different sizes, colors and styles which any first-class florist ought to be able to sell to good advantage. Remember, we do not try to sell anything that we think is liable to be a loss to the retailer, as the only way we can expect to prosper is by our customers being prosperous, and we always have their interests uppermost in our mind. We do not list all our glassware in our catalogue, as the book was issued before we received our shipments from Europe. However, if you will give us an idea of what you want we are sure you will be well pleased with what we send you, and if it is not entirely satisfactory, RETURN at once at our expense. That's fair, is it not?

As we have had such a large success with our assortments of Fancy Baskets and other novelties, we make you the same offer on our Bohemian Glassware.

Wholesalers' Changes.

"What have you on your minds today?" was the question of the reporter as he entered the new store of the Benthey-Coatsworth Co. "Nothing on our minds; only paint on our pants," was the reply. The staff is all busy getting things into shape, and when the work is finished the store will be, perhaps not the largest, but certainly one of the best-equipped and most livable in the market.

The Poehlmann Bros. Co. is taking advantage of the lull occasioned by light cuts to rearrange the store, taking in the room recently vacated by the Benthey-Coatsworth Co., and also the hall which gave access from Randolph street. It will more than double the size of their store.

The Winandy Sale.

The trustees of the estate of Michael Winandy appeared before Sidney C. Eastman, referee in bankruptcy, Wednesday morning and invited bids for all the bankrupt's property, greenhouses, personal property and his interest in the real estate, the whole to be sold as a going concern. The only bid was that of Arthur B. Dietsch, son of A. Dietsch, $4,500, which was accepted under the usual practice of leaving confirmation by the court open for seven days. A. Dietsch holds one of the mortgages to which the sale is subject. His firm also has an unsecured claim. The claims secured by mortgage are about $32,000. The unsecured claims filed in court total $45,778.77 and there are said to be claims not filed, but the latter will fare about as well as those proved up, for the Dietsch bid is about the expense of administration by the trustees, Edwin C. Day, Carl Ickes and Peter Reinberg. A full list of the proved claims is:

The Weather.

He saw his shadow all right, in Chicago, and no one would blame a groundhog for going back for another snooze, for it was 2 degrees below zero February 2. How the sun happened to shine that particular day is one of the mysteries. It has snowed pretty steadily since, and all through January there were only six clear days, with five on which the sun shown a few minutes, and twenty cloudy days. On nineteen days it rained more or less. The total precipitation for the month was 4.21 inches, or more than twice the average. The temperature was high compared with other Januarys, 115 degrees excess being accumulated in the month. The wind velocity was high, averaging fourteen miles an hour, but not so high as December, when the average was fifteen miles. January 20, with 4 degrees above zero, we had wind at sixty miles an hour for a few minutes.

Specials for the coming week—Rudd's Extra Fancy red and pink seedling Carnations. They are of the "Blue Ribbon" kind. Also Fancy Enchantress.

Various Notes.

William Fluegge, of Morton Grove, says he is well pleased with the quantity and quality of his carnation crop this year. At this season's prices he is doing first rate.

Kennicott Bros. Co. received the first of the season's crop of Klehm's Novelty tulip during the last week. The cut will increase rapidly. Already the stock is of excellent quality.

C. W. McKellar had an order Monday for 1,000 sweet peas, and 500 valley for a Memphis wedding. He has just received new stocks of ribbons and chiffons for Easter.

George Wienhoeber is at a sanitarium at Oconomowoc, again suffering with stomach trouble.

E. C. Amling is receiving large shipments of sweet peas and finds they sell excellently. He has two or three growers at Maywood who make a specialty of sweet peas the first months of the year, and they prove a most profitable crop.

Phil Schupp, manager of J. A. Budlong's city store, says that all they want is a day or two of good bright sun to bring along the finest crop of roses they have had this season. The color of their Maids is excellent.

There is much interest in the club's carnation show next week, Thursday, February 14, and it appears that not only will there be a banner attendance, but a fine show. Many novelties will be on view, and the local growers will show their best. The "doings" begin at 7 p. m.

The A. L. Randall Co. has just unpacked a large line of imported glassware.

At the meeting of the Horticultural Society last week Ernst Wienhoeber was elected treasurer, to succeed W. N. Rudd. As Mr. Rudd insists in also being relieved of the secretaryship, that office remains unfilled. The society is in a prosperous financial condition. The executive committee is authorized to proceed with the arrangements for the annual exhibition.

Clifford Pruner is on the road for E. F. Winterson Co. and reports, along with good orders, that the florists everywhere are having good trade and look forward to a big Easter.

Wietor Bros. report the receipt of many orders for rooted cuttings of chrysanthemums from those they supplied in previous years. They have a big lot of stock in the sand.

Joe Beaver plans to go into business for himself, and is negotiating for the Bruckner place, on Monroe street.

Harry Rowe reports trade quite active the last fortnight.

Anton Then leaves this week for a visit at Magnolia Springs, Ala. He will stay a few days at Mobile.

James Burdett, press agent for the flower show and for the National Council of Horticulture, is at Springfield, reporting the session of the legislature for the Journal. He will be of material assistance to the State Florists' Society in getting its appropriation for greenhouses at the State Experiment Station.

W. J. Smyth's father died a few days ago at Albany, N. Y. He was a Mason of over half a century's standing, the oldest there.

Colds and grip are prevalent. W. E. Lynch, at E. H. Hunt's, has been laid up for a couple of days. So has John Sinner. Robert Johnstone, of Vaughn &

Sperry's, was under the doctor's care a week. Percy Jones has been struggling with the grip microbes, but sticking to duty. He reports most satisfactory business last week.

At E. H. Hunt's they report selling Enchantress for as high as $8 per hundred Monday. In the supply department they now show their Christmas bell in white, a fine thing for wedding decorations.

The growers who make a specialty of rooted cuttings report good business on both roses and carnations. Scheiden & Schoos report an inquiry for 10,000 rooted cuttings of Enchantress.

Miss Martha Gunterberg is handling azaleas, primroses, etc., in the Growers' Market.

Vaughn & Sperry are building a private office in their corner of the Growers' Market.

Tuesday Bassett & Washburn shipped a box of their red seedling No. 20 to Mr. Bassett, who had started the day before for New York. Mr. and Mrs. Bassett sail on the Arabic Thursday for Egypt. The flowers were to be delivered to them on the boat.

M. V. Garnsey, of La Grange, reports a rapidly increasing demand for his Japana cut-flower holder and new Anglais table decorations. It is especially convenient for violets, valley, narcissi, etc.

One of the week's visitors was B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, with a line of samples of Easter novelties. Martin Reukauf, of Bayersdorfer's, Philadelphia, also has been in town. H. Brinkman and wife, Michigan City, Ind., were looking up stock in the market.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

The last week has been a record-breaker and we have experienced every kind of weather imaginable. But business was good. Society was in full blast. Many decorations were called for. One florist had six decorations in one day. Many banquets were held and dinners were given. The usual demand for funeral work was met.

Bulbous flowers are coming in more readily. Many Romans and narcissi were used for designs. Carnations and roses are still holding their own and bringing good prices. There has been a demand for sweet peas and smilax. Callas are steadier. Mignonette is fine and selling well. The southern violets have made their appearance, and the street boys are selling them at a good profit. Miscellaneous flowers are selling well. Greens of all kinds are coming in.

Various Notes.

T. Walter Gray, of Catonsville, Md., is erecting another house 18x90 for forcing Easter bulbs. The increasing business has made it necessary for him to build at this time of the year. Mr. Gray will soon make his appearance in market with his new wagon.

Griffith & Turner Co. received last week 200 bags of seed potatoes from the north, and they are claimed to be the finest lot that has been seen for many years.

John Eberhardt, Franklintown, will offer his place of twenty-five acres for sale. He has 12,600 feet of glass, heated by steam, improved by an up-to-date water system, a fine house and necessary buildings to make a complete commercial plant.

January 29 was McKinley day. Thousands of carnations were used in various ways. His bust in the post-office was decorated and G. A. R. veterans used many hundreds. The club rooms were decorated. A large majority of the citizens here were honoring the occasion by wearing carnations.

B. Stoll was in town wearing the smile that won't come off. He has a newcomer in his family, a bouncing boy.

Since the break in the weather many boiler-pits were filled with water, and many had to use pumps and pails. The river is rising, but we have no fear of floods.

The Fernery, on N. Charles street, has an attractive window display of various kinds of seasonable flowers.

Many private gardeners were at the different seedhouses securing early seeds for their hotbeds last week.

C. B. Hoffman, Arlington, Md., purchased from B. R. Clark about two weeks ago his range of greenhouses including stock. Fire broke out at 3:15 a. m. in one of the houses which threatened destruction of the entire range. Much difficulty was experienced in sending in an alarm. The severe weather we have had put some of the county alarm boxes out of commission and the telephone had to be used to notify the fire department. His smilax house suffered the most. About $200 damage was done. Messrs. Olers and C. Gregorius were on hand and did splendid work. After the fire was out they helped to make the necessary repairs to keep the houses from freezing. Mr. Olers' houses being close to Mr. Hoffman's, were in danger, but hard work saved them.

The ladies' night at the Gardeners' Club is being pushed in every way to make it a success. The banquet will be the most up-to-date yet held, and all the delicacies of the season will be served. Music will be one feature. A number of out-of-town guests will be there. The date set is February 11. J. L. T.

URBANA, ILL.—E. S. Dodson will build a greenhouse and will conduct it in connection with his nursery business.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade last week was really encouraging, though cut stock was scarce and prices had been up for several weeks, especially on fancy roses, and, of course, this kept prices firm in all grades. The commission men report a good shipping trade, which shows that the shortage must be general. The retailers all report a good general trade in all lines last week. Quite a number of good funeral orders were made up. Saturday was ground-hog day, and, as the sun was shining brightly all day, the growers will have their troubles for six weeks more, as today, Monday, we are having our first real touch of winter weather. The ground is covered with snow, and it is very cold.

At the commission houses everything in the rose line is scarce and away up in price. Carnations are helping out, as quite a good many are coming in. Then the demand is heavy and a large consignment does not last long. Violets have shortened up. What are coming in are of good quality. Bulbous stock is plentiful and selling well. Ferns are up to $2.50 per thousand this week.

Various Notes.

R. W. Eastlick, representing the Bombayreed Manufacturing Co., of Columbia, S. C., has established an office at 409 Walnut street, where he will take care of the local trade on baskets, etc.

We had with us last week Arnold Ringier and J. F. Lempke, both representing W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago; Mr. Ringier calling on the seedsmen and Mr. Lempke on the florists. Both report heavy orders for bulbs and seeds and advance orders for green and holly. B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., also did a good week's business here.

J. J. Karins, representing Henry Dreer, of Philadelphia, is with us this week, and there are many others.

Frank Buckshot, late with Ostertag Bros., is now with the Michel Plant and Bulb Co., on Magnolia avenue.

W. C. Smith has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of his father, who died Sunday, February 3, after a lingering illness. Mr. Smith was a brother-in-law of William Edlefsen and father-in-law to H. V. Hunkel, both of Milwaukee. The funeral took place February 5 from the residence, 1716 N. Grand avenue.

C. C. Sanders has purchased seventeen acres of land on the north and south road, which will be used for young nursery stock.

D. I. Bushnell, the well-known seedsman, and who has recently visited South America, has returned home and brought back with him as a souvenir a finished Indian stone tomahawk weighing fifteen and one-half pounds.

Professor William Trelease, director of the Missouri Botanic Garden, is away on a trip to the West Indies, looking up rare plants for the garden. Mr. Trelease will be absent for two months.

John Dunford's place, at Clayton, is in tip-top shape and is loaded down with fine Easter stock of all kinds. There are thousands of Harrisii and longiflorum lilies in pots.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

We are enjoying the business activity that always precedes Lent, the only drawbacks being the difficulty to secure enough of certain kinds of flowers, notably roses, to fill orders. The so-called spring flowers, tulips, freesias, single daffodils, etc., have been reinforced by the arrival of double Von Sion, which is now arriving in sufficient quantities to make it possible to list it regularly. American Beauty roses are sadly deficient in the medium grade; most of the long-stemmed flowers are of good quality, while most of the short-stemmed are poor. The colder weather has improved the quality of the smaller hybrid tea and tea roses and we are now getting some good stock in limited quantity. Carnations appear to be about equal to the demand, prices being a shade firmer than a week ago. Valley is in good supply; some large orders have been filled recently. Both orchids and gardenias are less plentiful than a week ago. Freesia is fine and can now be had in all grades. Myosotis has made its appearance in limited quantities, with the probability of an increase before St. Valentine's day. Romans and Paper Whites, which have been selling unusually well, are rather less in demand than for the last two weeks.

Sleepy Philadelphia.

It is customary to speak of the City of Brotherly Love as being a sleepy place, where business men go for a rest, despite the fact that our supply houses, seed houses, wholesale florists and plant growers supply a great part, and in some cases the whole, of this country. It now appears that our retailers have come well to the fore, as the following incident will show:

A few days ago the buyer from one of the largest New York retail stores visited this city expressly to secure one of the lace bouquet holders desired by a customer in Washington. He went straight to 1220 Race street, saw Mr. Rice personally, and stated the object of his visit. Mr. Rice told him that the entire stock had been purchased by a Philadelphia retailer and at his visitor's request, the retailer was called up on the phone, and told that a special customer desired just one of these lace bouquet holders. The retailer replied that he had none to sell, and the New Yorker was unable to secure a duplicate anywhere.

Inspiration.

Every florist feels at one time or another a depression of spirits due, it may be, to hard work, long hours, poor business, or the failure of some carefully laid plan. At such times the wise man seeks inspiration before renewing the strife. Inspiration may be obtained in a variety of ways; from a choice ballroom or table decoration, from a house of foliage or flowering plants, from a chat with another florist, and so on, according to the peculiar exigencies of the case.

I doubt if anyone in the City of Brotherly Love has given more inspiration to his fellow florists than has Robert Craig. Florists all over the country will endorse this statement. Little florists and big florists, old and young, rich and poor, have sought inspiration from him during twenty-five years and more. Rarely have they gone away without seeing or hearing something that inspires them with fresh courage to renew the good fight. I well remember the time when I needed that courage often, and, while increase of responsibility begets greater self-reliance, the pleasure is even keener on the rare occasions when time and tide favor a call at Forty-ninth and Market streets.

It was on one of these visits that I got a few ideas from Mr. Craig that may interest REVIEW readers. One, the propagation of Adiantum hybridum, has already appeared in this column.

Mr. Craig is devoting especial attention this season to roses for Easter and spring sales. His collection includes novelties and standard varieties of the highest merit. Of the former, Annie Muller, a dwarf cluster rose, is considered very promising. While it is risky to talk about a plant one has never seen in bloom, it appears to be in pink about what Baby Rambler is in red. Wiegand's Rambler is another novelty highly esteemed by the London growers, who consider it very superior. Tausendshon (Thousand Beauties) is a cluster rose with much larger flowers than Crimson Rambler, which, nevertheless, is here in quantity and will make a hard fight for supremacy at Easter. Lady Gay and Dorothy Perkins, two fine pink cluster forcers, are also here in numbers. The former is believed to be the better sort.

All the other Easter plants are being grown in quantity. Mr. Craig believes the early Easter will interfere but little with the production of choice stock in ample time, barring possibly one or two of the less responsive varieties to be flowered.

In decorative plants Ficus pandurata has made itself a place in Mr. Craig's heart and in his houses. It looks well, and will look better as the young stock comes along. Dracæna Pere Charon—the ancients say he will see us safely across the deep, swift river, you know—is beautiful, resembling a highly colored Dracæna terminalis with broader foliage. There were many other interesting things and much interesting talk, including Mr. Craig's opinion in Nephrolepis Amerpohlii. "I think," he said, "Will was fortunate to get it." The Will referred to is Mr. Craig's son, William P. Craig, who owns half the stock of this promising fern.

Club Meeting.

The carnation meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, held February 5, was well attended. Among the speakers were J. E. Haines, Bethlehem, Pa.; E. A. Stroud, Overbrook, Pa.; W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J.; J. A. Valentine, Denver; A. M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa.; Wm. Swayne, Kennett Square, each of whom added much to the pleasure of those present.

John E. Haines, Bethlehem, brought fine Imperial, Pink Imperial and Haines. H. Weber & Sons Co., Oakland, sent Mabelle, a promising commercial pink. Charles Leisy, of Wenonah, made a fine exhibit of Enchantress and a number of choice seedlings. H. P. Potter, of Wilmington, sent a striped seedling. W. A.

Various Notes.

The Leo Niessen Co. is spending its last week at 1217 Arch street. Next Monday they will open in their commodious new quarters at 1209 Arch street.

The following item was written for this column on Monday afternoon: "Horace T. Dumont has withdrawn from the wholesale commission business, accepting a position with an outside firm. The entire business of his firm, Dumont & Co., will be carried on by Berger Bros., who will move from their present quarters, at 1237 Filbert street, to the quarters now occupied by Dumont & Co., at 1305 Filbert street." Monday night Dumont & Co. were burned out, with no insurance. Therefore the Berger deal is off.

John Lees, of Frankford, is sending some exceptionally fine scarlet tulips, Belle Alliance, much prized at St. Valentine's, and double Von Sion, to W. E. McKissick.

J. A. Valentine, of Denver, Colo., is a visitor in town this week.

Stockton & Howell, of Princeton, N. J., will add one large house to their present rose-growing establishment next summer. This house will be used for Richmond. Bride, Bridesmaid and Beauty are now their mainstays.

P. J. Lynch, secretary and treasurer of the Dingee & Conard Co., Westgrove, Pa., addressed the Washington Florists' Club last Tuesday evening on behalf of the American Rose Society.

Wm. McPhee, of the Dilworth Floral Co., Charlotte, N. C., was a visitor in town this week.

M. J. Brinton, of Christiana, Pa., is sending well grown freesias to W. J. Baker.

The Leo Niessen Co. is receiving bunches of the pretty Acacia pubescens from W. & Harry F. Evans, Rowlandville, Pa.

C. L. Fisher, of Atlantic City, N. J., was a visitor recently. Mr. Fisher was in search of material for a large decoration.

John E. Haines, of South Bethlehem, Pa., read an interesting paper on his experience with carnations before the Florists' Club Tuesday evening February 5. This paper will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Charles Smith, of Harrisburg, lost his store in the opera house fire.

Charles F. Edgar's friends will be glad to know he is with the Leo Niessen Co.

This should have read the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., and was intended to convey the idea to the initiated whence came this choice stock.

Referring again to question No. 60, I am afraid the grower is too far off to ship the sweet peas satisfactorily during the heated term. PHIL.

The funeral of Thomas Meehan, Jr., son of Thomas B. Meehan, Germantown, was held February 1. The services were conducted at the house by the Rev. John C. Calhoun, pastor of the Mt. Airy Presbyterian Church. Interment was in Ivy Hill cemetery. Young Meehan, who was 9 years old, died January 28 in the Germantown hospital from injuries received in a fall from a third-story window of his home.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Roses are slowly recovering from the scarcity which has prevailed for several weeks. They are none too plentiful yet, however, and prices hold up well. Carnations are rather more abundant and prices have weakened somewhat. Violets are procurable at 25 cents and upwards. Growers of best singles are getting 50 cents to 75 cents. Daffodils are more abundant and sell a trifle lower. They clean out well. Golden Spur and double Von Sion are leaders. Campanulas are quite plentiful. La Reine continues the leader in tulips, which are also meeting with good sales. Easter lilies and callas are each in rather short supply and prices rule firm.

Some fine mignonette is arriving. The best realizes $1 per dozen. Pansies, primroses, wallflowers and other early spring flowers are seen. There is a fair demand for lily of the valley. Best sweet peas still make $1.50 per hundred and sell readily. Prices on green stock remain about the same.

Pot plants are meeting with a better sale. Cyclamens, Dutch bulbous stock and azaleas are the three leaders. Lent will soon be here, and some slump in price is likely then, with the dropping of social festivities.

Various Notes.

The lecture by George T. Powell on "The Renovation of an Old Apple Orchard" drew a large audience to Horticultural hall February 2, every seat in the lecture hall being taken. The numerous questions asked proved that the subject was of great interest to the audience.

William Whitman, M. Sullivan gardener, received a cultural certificate for a splendidly flowered specimen plant of Cattleya Trianæ at Horticultural hall February 2.

Prospects are bright for an attractive list of special prizes at the chrysanthemum show next November.

Some exhibits of new carnations and other interesting features will be included in the next club meeting program, February 19, which all should plan to attend.

William C. Rust, of Brookline, was operated on for appendicitis February 3. At last report he was doing nicely, and we hope for his early convalescence.

S. J. Goddard and others visited C. W. Ward's establishment on their way home from Toronto, and found everything in grand condition.

William Nicholson visited Richmond, Ind., after the convention and will accompany home Mrs. Nicholson, who was visiting there.

J. W. Duncan is the lecturer at Horticultural hall on February 9 and should have a large audience.

Frank J. Dolansky, of Lynn, is producing quantities of the finest Mont Blanc sweet peas we have seen in winter. They meet with quick sales at the Park street market.

Enchantress carnation made a pleasing effect in Doyle's Boylston street store last week.

With Framingham Growers.

J. T. Butterworth continues to add to his orchid collection, and now has several houses devoted to their culture. From present indications his entire place will be needed to hold them before long. Cattleyas are chiefly grown and are in first-class condition. Many big specimens are to be noted of C. Gigas, Mossiæ, Percivalliana, Trianæ, labiata and others. We counted no less than twenty-five sheaths on one C. Mossiæ in an 8-inch pot. C. Harrisoniæ is grown in quantity and proves a valuable summer sort. C. Trianæ was the principal kind flowering when we called, but the flowers would not open fast enough for the demand. Some fine Lælia anceps were flowering. A pure white form with flowers five and a half inches across was one of the finest we had ever seen. Dendrobiums, Cypripedium insigne, cælogynes and other orchids are equally well grown. Most of the cattleyas are in baskets and osmunda firm fiber is used for compost. Bulbous stock is largely grown, all the leading narcissi and tulips being handled in quantity. Lily of the valley is done especially well. Carnations looked well. The Queen was excellent and Harry Fenn, Enchantress, Fair Maid and Patten were producing a heavy crop. Mr. Butterworth has much faith in Hammond's slug shot as a destroyer of cut worms. Dusted on plants and soil, it cleans all out in a week. A large lot of Lilium speciosum album from retarded bulbs was just coming into bloom and will prove extremely useful.

At S. J. Goddard's we found a large proportion of the variety, Helen Goddard, cut down to supply cuttings, the demand for it being heavy this season. Enchantress remains as fine as ever. Harry Fenn was splendid, as was Victory. Cardinal had many fine flowers. The Queen was loaded with flowers and Lady Bountiful was equally good. Patten will be dropped, as it is too slow in winter. Mr. Goddard has a batch of a fine variegated seedling, Helen Goddard x Enchantress, which looks like a winner. Other promising seedlings were seen. Rose-pink Enchantress was nice. The demand for cuttings is strong. Last year many were shipped to England and large orders are coming in from that country at present. Mr. Goddard will try the new English scarlet, Britannia, which beat Victory and Robert Craig in London last December. Nice batches of cyclamens, azaleas and other seasonable flowering plants were noted. These are mostly sold at retail.

William Nicholson has as fine Harry Fenn as we ever saw. Harlowarden will be dropped. The Queen and Lady Bountiful are leading whites. A white seedling of Witterstaetter's is immense. Afterglow is fine and of a beautiful rosy-pink shade. It should prove a popular variety when introduced. Victory was producing splendid flowers. Robert Craig carried a great crop, but was bursting badly. Beacon will be grown in quantity another year. Quite a few Prosperity are still grown. It does extremely well here. Enchantress was much better than Fair Maid. Patten is grown as a striped variety and succeeds well. Two houses were filled with white and yellow marguerites, which should give a wealth of Easter flower. Fischer's Purity freesia in pans was extra fine. Fine lots of violets, Primula obconica and cyclamens were seen. A batch of 50,000 shamrocks was in evidence for St. Patrick's day.

Alexander McKay, who has not been in business long, grows about 12,000 carnations, chiefly The Queen, Fair Maid, Enchantress, Patten and Harry Fenn. All were in first-class shape. Several thousand Lilium longiflorum were coming on for Easter. Freesia is grown in considerable numbers. No other stock is grown, but Mr. McKay has done wonders for the time he has been in the commercial line.

At Johnson & Nelson's, which was the last place we had time to visit, the principal house is 23x370, mostly in carnations. They are grown in solid beds and could hardly have looked better or carried more flowers. A seedling, Lawson x Prosperity, of which there were 2,500 plants, is a good thing. We failed to find a burst calyx. The stem is long and stiff, flower a little lighter than Lawson and of a much more pleasing shade. The Queen, Enchantress and Fenn were the chief standard sorts grown, and Lawson looked better than we had seen it for a long time. Another house was chiefly devoted to Mont Blanc and Earliest of All sweet peas, three rows running the whole length. As many as 1,400 spikes a day are cut, and the quality was excellent.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

In all our experience in the business we have never seen stock so scarce as at present, and never have prices ruled any higher. Christmas is not in it, or, in fact, any other holiday. Stock is so scarce that every bloom is picked up in such a hurry that the buyers do not even stop to ask the price, but pay whatever is charged and have not a word to say. This latter fact is, to say the least an unusual one. We have all been expecting a shortage of stock, but we did not look for it to be so severe as it is. The unusual weather conditions are, of course, the cause of it all, and with the kind of weather we are having at present there is little chance of a change in conditions for some time. Bulbous flowers are the only ones with which we can come anywhere near filling orders. There is a fair supply of narcissi, Romans, tulips, valley, etc.; just about enough to go around. The price on this class of flowers has taken a decided brace and they are bringing good money all along the line.

As might have been expected, there is a big out-of-town demand, and many are the orders which have to be turned down. The wholesalers have their troubles, and the only thing they can do is to divide up the stock, giving each customer his proportion.

Various Notes.

Saturday evening, February 9, the regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Society will be held. From all indications it will be a well-attended meeting, as the committee which has been studying over the advisability of holding a first-class flower show next November in this city will make its report. That this city is ripe for a good, big flower show goes without saying, and it would appear that next November would be an opportune time for it, owing to the fact that it is understood that Indianapolis will not hold a show at that time. Such being the case, Cincinnati will have almost a clear field and will be assured of having the proper kind of goods on exhibition if the proper prizes are offered. But holding an up-to-date flower show at the present time is no small matter and requires a backing of $4,000 to $7,000. I believe, though, that with the proper man at the head, who would have charge of all details, there would be no question but that a show could be made to pay in this city, and to pay big. There would be some money to be made out of it were is properly handled.

J. M. McCullough's Sons, and also J. Charles McCullough were put to considerable annoyance by the recent high water, to say nothing of financial loss. The latter firm was obliged to move its offices to the northeast corner of Third and Walnut streets, in the Masonic Temple, and they have decided to remain there until the busy season is over. As the river rose they were obliged to move some 11,000 bags of grass seeds, which was no small matter. A large wholesale grocery warehouse in the neighborhood was undermined by the water and was wrecked.

Charles Pfeiffer, who has a fine greenhouse plant near Ft. Thomas, Ky., will open a retail store in Newport, Ky., in a short time. At present he is selling his output at the flower market. He will not give up his stand in the market.

C. J. Ohmer.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

The extremely cold weather has hurt business the last week. Some orders are received by phone, but not a sufficient number to make up for the trade that is lost by the cold. Stock has taken a decided brace, and the growers are sending in as fine a quality of roses as we have had this season. Although it has been bitterly cold, we have had a great deal of sunshine, and stock has come along in fine shape.

The greenhouse owners are beginning to complain of the large amount of fuel they have to consume, and, as we are promised six more weeks of severe winter, according to the groundhog, it is but natural to expect a material advance in prices on everything.

Easter stock looks well. The lilies are fine and from every appearance more are being grown than in any previous year. In some cases they have figured on at least a twenty-five per cent better demand than last year. Hydrangeas and spiræas are about the only plants that are not grown so extensively as in the

CAULIFLOWER.

Cauliflower, like lettuce, succeeds best when planted in a solid bed. In raised benches the growth is not so free. Consequently the heads are usually smaller. We have, however, seen some good crops matured on raised benches. It has the advantage over lettuce in not being subject to attacks of fungus diseases, such as leaf-burn, stem-rot, etc. The only time fungus troubles the plants is in the early stages of growth, either in the seedling box or just after the first pricking out, but with a little judgment in watering and handling the plants the trouble is not hard to overcome.

The relative virtues of the different strains or varieties is a matter on which opinions differ considerably. The main essentials in a forcing cauliflower are earliness, dwarfness, compactness and whiteness of head. Several varieties, or rather strains of early dwarf cauliflowers, are found on the market, so many, in fact, that it is rather a hard matter to know just where we are at. Nearly every country seed store has a cauliflower bearing its name, most of them being either the plain Dwarf Erfurt or a selection from that old standard variety. Where the matter of selection has really been carried out judiciously, the advantage of the strain is often quite pronounced, but the only way to know what is in the strain is to try, and keep trying until the best has been procured, and then stick to it and the house that is sending it out.

Successional plantings may still be made indoors and plants should be kept coming on for planting in coldframes as soon as the weather becomes sufficiently warm. Sowings should also be made from this time on to procure plants for outdoor planting. It is better to have them started in time and let them come along slowly, thus procuring nice, firm plants and allowing plenty of time to get them well hardened off.

Crops nearing maturity in the greenhouse can be considerably assisted by feeding now that the days are getting longer and brighter. Being a healthy feeder they are not very particular what form of food is given, but to get the full benefit of the manure applied it is necessary to give something that will act quickly and apply it in a liquid form. Nitrate of soda makes a good article for this purpose, but when waste from the barnyard can be procured it is hard to beat. Sheep manure can be procured, from which a good liquid can be made, but the nitrate of soda or something of that nature being cleaner and quicker in action, is preferable to the sheep manure article. Of course if the soil is of good quality, the crop may

STERILIZING LETTUCE SOIL.

Of the many vegetable growers at Grand Rapids, Mich., none is better known than Eugene Davis, to whom the gardening fraternity is indebted for the Grand Rapids lettuce, the Davis Kidney Wax bean and other valuable varieties. The following notes on soil sterilization cover the subject as it appears to a layman visiting Mr. Davis' place:

"One of the most perplexing problems connected with the growing of vegetables under glass is the renewal of the worn-out soil. When the soil of a greenhouse has been used for some time it becomes practically dead, and no amount of cultivating or fertilizing will make it productive. And, furthermore, the soil not only ceases to be productive but becomes a breeding place for the various fungus diseases which infest lettuce and other products of the greenhouse.

"Heretofore about the only remedy for this condition of affairs was to remove several inches of soil from the top of the solid beds used for lettuce and replace it with fresh. This, while it helped to some extent, did not go deep enough, and was by no means a complete remedy, and in a large greenhouse the removal and replacement of so much soil meant a heavy expense.

"Mr. Davis believes he has solved the problem of how to use the same soil in his greenhouse year after year for an indefinite period and still have it retain its productiveness. His method is to use common 1-inch iron steam pipes with numerous small holes drilled throughout their whole length. These perforated pipes are buried in the soil to a depth of ten or twelve inches and attached to the steam boiler. Then the steam is turned on and left so for from three to eight hours until the soil is thoroughly cooked. The operation in itself is simple, but Mr. Davis says it does the business and is only about one-tenth as expensive as replacing the old soil with new.

"Last year the State Agricultural College heard of Mr. Davis' plan and sent a man to investigate. His report was so favorable to the new process that the college authorities have been carrying on a series of careful and exhaustive experiments. They have not confined themselves to perforated pipes but have experimented with pipes made of a porous substance, and have also tested an apparatus made like an old-fashioned spike-toothed drag, the teeth being made of perforated iron pipes about ten or twelve inches long. These are attached to a framework and all connected with each other. The whole arrangement is placed with the teeth downward on the soil to be sterilized and the teeth are forced into the soil. This is designed to do away with burying the pipes

"Mr. Davis' success has prompted several other greenhouse men to adopt the system within the last year, and it is probable that it will be universally used throughout this section in the course of a year or two."

WHITE onion sets are quite scarce and the price for them is now far above the ordinary value when compared with the yellow and red.

VISITED CHICAGO:—Alfred J. Brown, of Alfred J. Brown Seed Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.; A. J. Milton, with the Chas. H. Lilly Co., Seattle, Wash.

UNDER the circumstances, H. W. Fisher, manager of the seed division of Montgomery Ward & Co., Chicago is not complaining at the wintry weather.

THERE still are quantities of lily of the valley pips arriving at New York. The last boat from Hamburg, February 1, brought fifty cases for J. M. Thorburn & Co.

IRONDEQUOIT muskmelon is one of the specialties of James Vick's Sons, Rochester, but this year's wholesale list has after the name of the variety the words "crop failed."

ALFRED J. BROWN, of the A. J. Brown Seed Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., has returned from a fortnight's successful contracting trip among the trade in the eastern cities.

THE German flower seeds are not all in yet, and these delayed lots are making trouble out of all proportion to their importance as affecting the total of the season's business.

DURING the recent high water at Cincinnati J. M. McCullough's Sons and J. Charles McCullough were put to much trouble. The latter had to remove its office and 11,000 bags of grass seeds.

IT is reported that seed of the flat varieties of onion being offered to the set growers is of fairly good germination. On the globe sorts the percentage of germination is much lower; too low, in fact, in many cases.

THE accident met by one of the salesmen for D. M. Ferry & Co., who got a chicken bone stuck in his throat, causes a smile, not because of the gentleman's painful plight, but for the evidence it affords that even a representative of the great house of Ferry occasionally finds himself in a position where he needs help.

THE board of general appraisers at New York has advanced the valuation of a shipment of 7-9 Lilium rubrum from 29 yen to 42 yen per thousand. These were exported by L. Boehmer & Co.,

CATALOGUE HELD UP.

The post-office authorities at Chicago have held up the seed catalogue of Montgomery Ward & Co. because of the prize offers it contains. It goes without saying that Montgomery Ward & Co. do not wish to infringe the postal laws, nor do they think they have done so. They have filed with the post-office representations that the winning of their prizes is not at all a matter of chance, but a matter of cultural skill, in which contention they will have the support of the trade. They also have filed with the post-office copies of other seed catalogues with the claim that their prize offers are not different from the prize offers other reputable seedsmen have made for years.

Most of the Montgomery Ward & Co. prizes are for the largest vegetable grown from their seed of a given variety. No other characteristic is to be considered. They direct that the contestant take careful measurements and weights of his specimen, whatever it is, and send these in a letter attested by three neighbors. The specimen itself is not to be sent. Where quality is to be considered the specimens are to be sent, express prepaid, to Montgomery Ward & Co., who will appoint judges to announce awards November 1.

It is difficult to see what the objectionable feature is. Montgomery Ward & Co. are advised that the restriction of the competition to the product of their seed is the worst feature. It is hard to see where an element of chance enters the contests. But the authorities at Washington have upheld the action of the Chicago office, and it looks as though the firm would have to put its book back on the press, eliminating the prize offers. There is, of course, a possibility that they finally will be permitted to mail their book as it is, for there are several other books now going out in other cities with almost identical offers. At any rate, it behooves the seed trade to get an official O. K. on any prize offers which may be contemplated before printing future lists.

THE SEEDSMEN'S PROBLEM.

A seed corn grower in Ohio writes to an eastern seed house that he "will contract to grow sugar corn provided he be sent a variety producing tall, stiff stalks, as his farm hands will only husk corn from uncut stalks and will not bend their backs for any man."

This prompted the recipient to observe that "this certainly is a great country; no wonder the down-trodden of Europe, at the rate of three millions a year, come to a country where farm hands are declining to bend their backs, and where, of course, men of higher occupations than clodhoppers will all soon at the instigation of the walking delegates of the labor unions insist on wearing kid gloves while dilly-dallying over what passes for work; and yet, the seed merchants are so competing with each other for orders at any price that many of them are on a fair road to the poorhouse."

MARKET GROWERS' JOURNAL.

In the Review of January 31 there appeared this item: "The seed trade is being asked to start a market gardeners' journal at Louisville, Ky., by buying subscriptions in bulk. The man on the road is from the force of Wood, Stubbs & Co., and states that this firm is behind the project."

Under date of February 1, Wood, Stubbs & Co. state that "this is an error" and ask the publication of the following "correction," which we grant with pleasure. We always are glad to print the facts.

"The company of Wood, Stubbs & Co. is in no way connected with the Market Growers' Journal Co. except as acting as subscription agent for the journal. J. C. Wilson, who was recently with us, has resigned his position to accept one with the Market Growers' Journal Co. The officers of the Market Growers' Journal Co. are: President, C. F. Wood, of Wood, Stubbs & Co.; vice-president, E. H. Bowen, president Louisville Board of Trade, also ex-president National League of Commission Merchants of the United States; secretary and treasurer, Jas. C. Stone. With the above the directors are: Geo. Braden, president of the Federal Chemical Co.; C. F. Huhlein, vice-president and general manager of B. F. Avery & Sons, also ex-president of National Association of Agricultural Implements and Vehicle Manufacturers of the United States; Chas. Scholtz, Jr., president Jos. Denunzio Fruit Co.; Edw. F. Wetstein, practical gardener, also secretary and treasurer of the Gardeners' and Farmers' Market Co.

JAPANESE LILIUMS.

There is still a great doubt existing among English growers, says the Horticultural Trade Journal, as to which are the best types of longiflorum to handle; only a few are able to distinguish the difference between eximium, multiflorum and giganteum (Takesima is another name given by some importers to giganteum). Eximium is the cheapest and the least valuable, producing fewer blooms, and these are of a thin, poor and watery nature, the petals in some cases almost transparent; the growth is poor and the foliage scant; it does not possess sufficient constitution to retard successfully. In spite of this, however, it is probably used in much larger quantities than the other two sorts, perhaps on account of its cheapness, and ease of propagation and cultivation in Japan. Multiflorum is simply an improved and glorified form of eximium, and is perhaps a little difficult to distinguish from it, as its general characteristics are the same, excepting that it is stronger in growth and produces more

DREER'S
Reliable Flower Seeds

NEW ORCHID-FLOWERED SWEET PEAS.

These are a distinct "break" in Sweet Peas, differing from the standard sorts by the extraordinary size of their flowers, usually measuring 2 inches across, and by the standards being crinkled and wavy, while the wings are large and spreading. Another splendid feature is that a very large percentage bear four blossoms to the stem, which are long and strong.

COUNTESS SPENCER. A lovely clear pink, shading darker at the edges. 10c per oz.; 25c per ¼-lb.; 75c per lb.

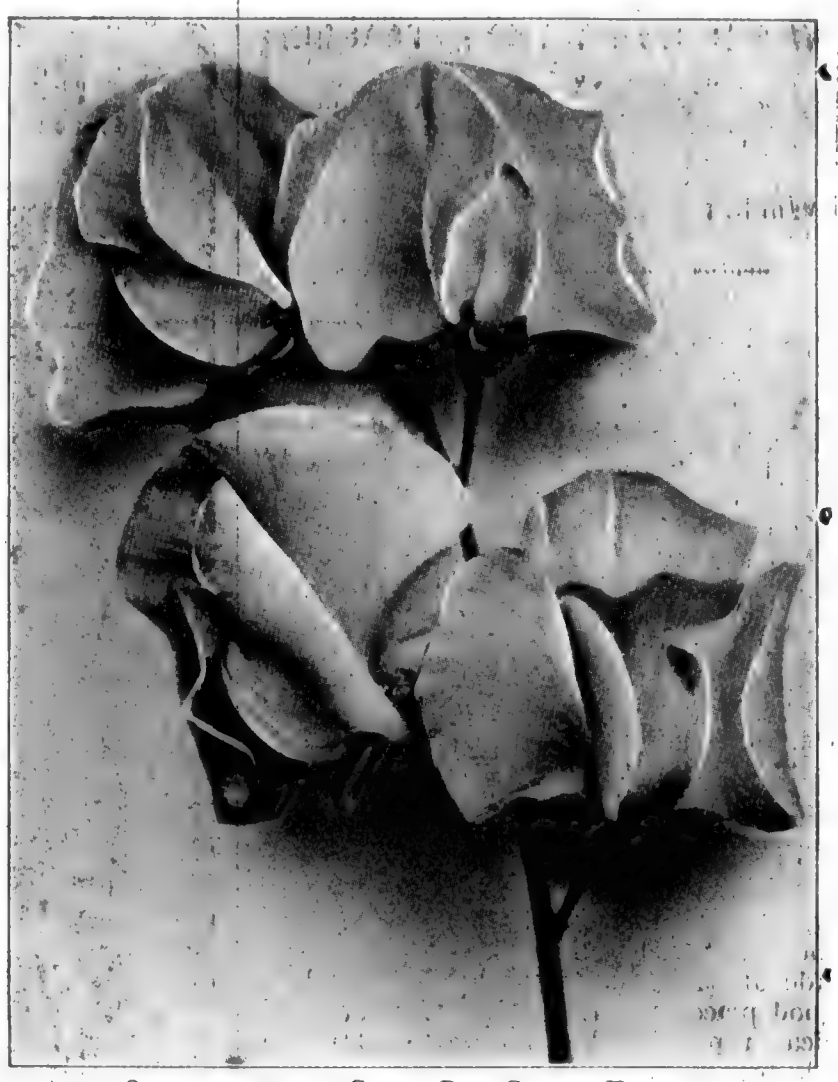
E. J. CASTLE. Rich carmine-rose, shaded with salmon, very striking, especially under artificial light. 27c per pkt., 5 pkts., 75c.

FRANK DOLBY. The largest and finest pale lavender-blue. 17c per pkt.; 5 pkts., 75c.

GLADYS UNWIN. Charming shade of pale rose-pink; extra long stems and very valuable for cutting. 10c per oz.; 25c per ¼-lb.; 75c per lb.

HELEN LEWIS. (Orange Countess.) Brilliant orange-rose. 25c per oz.

HELEN PIERCE. This is the new gloxinia-flowered Sweet Pea, being marbled blue on a white ground, with the veins showing a little deeper, exactly like a mottled Gloxinia. 15c per oz.; 50c per ¼-lb.



JOHN INGMAN. Rich salmon-rose. 15c per oz.; 50c per ¼-lb.

MRS. ALFRED WATKINS. A superb pale pink, similar in shade to the old Princess Beatrice. 17c per pkt.; 5 pkts., 75c.

NORA UNWIN. The finest white now in existence. 17c per pkt.; 5 pkts., 75c.

PHYLLIS UNWIN. A veritable giant among Sweet Peas; color a deep rose-carmine. 15c per oz.; 50c per ¼-lb.

bloom and of a more robust texture. Its constitution is much superior, consequently it is one of the best for retarding. Sometimes the packers in Japan, or merchants here, mix multiflorum with eximium, with the result that the batch grows uneven, some bulbs growing strong, with a good number of perfect blooms, while others are poor in growth, with only a few blooms. In the majority of cases the result is put down to weak bulbs or poor cultivation, very few growers knowing they have the two sorts mixed. For really reliable work and for retarding and producing the largest number of the finest blooms, L. longiflorum giganteum is the best, and, although its price is a long way above either of the other two, the satisfactory results obtained from it make it really the cheapest and most profitable of all three, at least for late retarding. Its hardy constitution enables it to withstand the effects of long storage much better than either of the others. The variety can be easily distinguished by having a more or less black stem, the leaves are larger and set wider apart, the growth is stronger, the blooms are larger and have more substance, and are perhaps of a purer white; the back of the bloom is a darker green. Any grower intending to take up the cultivation of liliums on a large scale will do well to give all the varieties a trial so as to make absolutely certain he is getting exactly the sort he desires before investing a large sum of money.

this year a much larger acreage is booked. For all contracts the average price is an improvement on previous year's business.

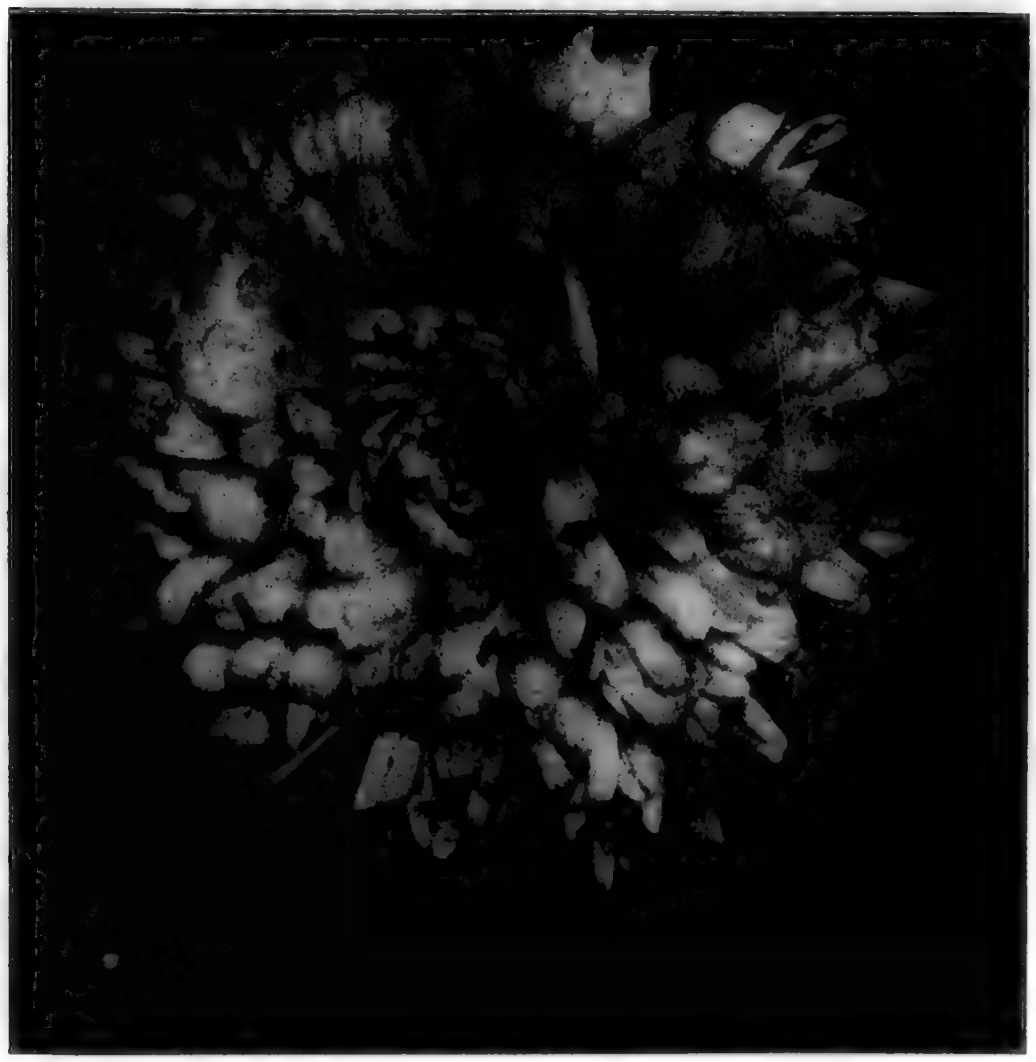
An increasing demand is being experienced for English-grown garden peas on the Continent and abroad, and some heavy shipments have already been made. In conversation with a number of seedsmen some two months ago I gathered it was the general opinion that seed peas would go to a low and unprofitable price. Fortunately, these fears have not been realized, and prices continue at a fairly profitable level.

The seed potato trade in England has never recovered from the blow it received at the bursting of the boom. Consequently, the season following a fairly heavy crop, is a stagnant one for the seed trade. The little trade being done is in the oldest and well tried sorts. A bright side of the trade is the keen demand at good prices for seed to go to South Africa, a provincial firm recently shipping 500 tons in one order.

It may be interesting, and also give an idea of the business done by some of the leading English seed houses, to know that Carter & Co., of Holborn, London, have just posted 137,000 spring seed catalogues, weighing nearly seventy tons. The paper and printing cost just under $20,000, and the postage nearly $10,000. The firm recently occupied the whole front page of the London Daily Mail with a seed advertisement, nearly half of the space being occupied by sweet peas.

The Sweet Pea Annual for 1907 contains an audit of the varieties exhibited during 1906. The variety exhibited the most times was Dorothy Eckford, 121 times, followed by King Edward VII, with 97 times; Gladys Unwin, 81; Miss Wilmott, 72; Mrs. Walter Wright, 69; Lady Grisel Hamilton, 68; Countess Spencer, 63, etc. There are nearly 100 varieties shown once and not more than three times. J. B.

FREE SEEDS.



"Our old friend, the free seed appropriation, has appeared again," says the Chicago Tribune. "Stricken out in committees, it has been restored by the house, and emerges serene. It is too good a bit of graft to lose.

"The theory upon which the free seed appropriation is justified is that the seeds are selected varieties sent out by the Department of Agriculture for purposes of scientific investigation. The recipient is supposed to report to the department the character of the soil and other conditions and the result obtained. As a matter of fact the seeds are purchased in large quantities from regular dealers and the Department of Agriculture knows nothing about their nature and cares nothing about the results. The actual experiments of the Department are carried on in another way.

"The inclusion of ordinary varieties of flower seed with directions for forming window-gardens shows an abandonment of even a pretense of scientific value to the appropriation. It may possibly brighten many flats to have flowers at government expense, but why not tidies, door mats, and plaster busts? An appropriation to provide every voter of the same political faith as his member of congress with a pink lamp shade would fail of passage, but the seed bill goes through each year. It is considered one of the perquisites of the congressman and serves the useful purpose of making each recipient think that the congressman has a personal interest in him.

"The cost to the government does not stop with the purchase of the seeds. The number of tons of packages which go into the regular mails and have to be paid for helps to increase the deficiency in postal revenues, while the expenditure for seeds, ostensibly for the purposes of the Department of Agriculture, makes the total appropriation for that department larger than it would

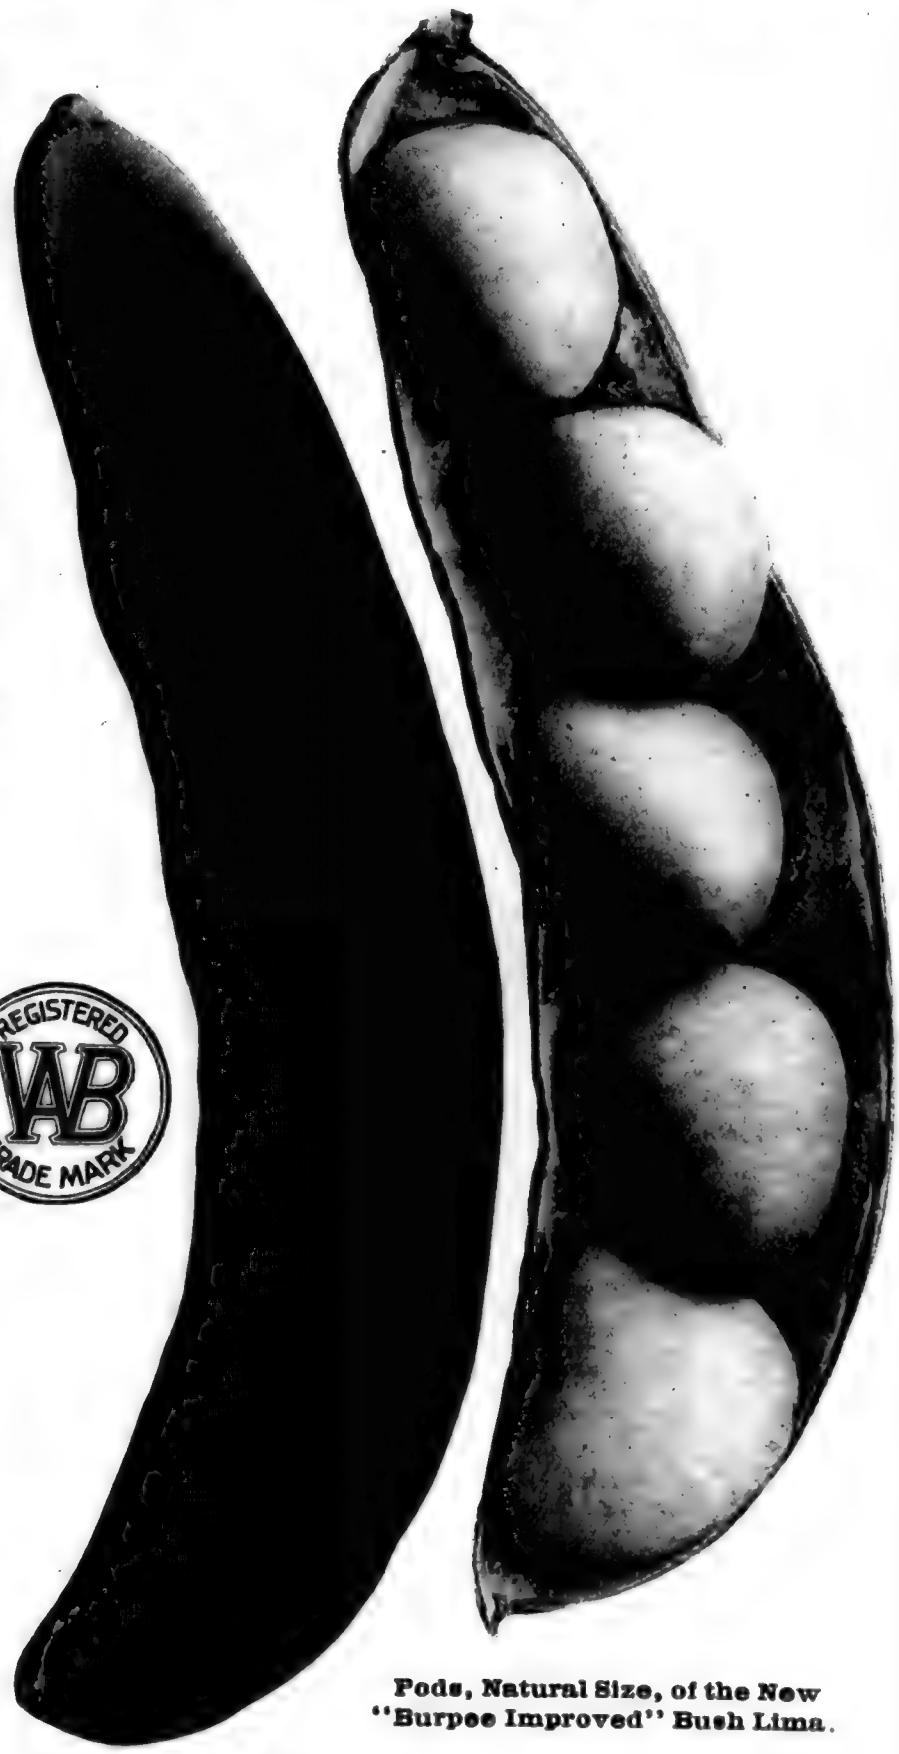
TWO "NEW CREATIONS" IN BUSH LIMAS

Nature surely has surpassed herself! In a single season she has outstripped all efforts of man In fact, such distinct new types have never even been dreamed of before!

Look at the illustrations shown of the BURPEE IMPROVED and FORDHOOK BUSH LIMAS, recall to mind the largest and best pods of Lima Beans you have ever seen, and you must agree with us that this is a most remarkable find. To learn just what they really are and how they were discovered, kindly study pages 10 to 15 of THE FARM ANNUAL FOR 1907. These two most unique new Bush Limas will be worth many thousands of dollars annually to the gardeners of America. They are undoubtedly the "Greatest Novelties of the Age."

The Burpee Improved is an entirely "New Creation." The pods are truly enormous in size, borne in great abundance upon bushes two and one-half feet high by two feet across. The beans are both larger and thicker than those of the popular Burpee Bush Lima or any strain of the large White Pole Lima.



Fordhook Bush Lima. This is altogether unique. Nothing like it has ever been seen before. It is the first and only stiffly erect Bush form of the fat "Potato Lima." Both pods and beans are twice the size of Dreer's and more than half again as large as the Challenger Pole Lima.

$1115.00 in Cash Prizes for 1907.

With one prize of $150.00, several of $50.00 each, we will pay a total of $1115.00 on these Two New Bush Limas. For particulars see page 28 and page 199 of BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1907.

These Bush Limas are sold only in sealed packets. Each packet contains twelve perfect hand-picked beans. Per pkt., 25c—less the discount of one-third on retail packets,—making 3 pkts. for 50c; 6 pkts. for $1.00 or $2.00 per dozen pkts., postpaid, and assorted as desired.

otherwise be and prevents the appropriation of money for really valuable objects. In every conceivable way the government loses by this appropriation and the largest gainers are the professional dealers in seeds who are so fortunate as to be favored by government contracts.''

The Department some weeks ago made its contracts with ''the largest gainers'' for seeds for the 1908 distribution, subject to the usual provision regarding the action of congress in making the appropriation.

CANNERS' CONVENTION.

The national convention of Fruit and Vegetable Packers and Allied Associations at Buffalo February, 11-16, inclusive, promises to be by a considerable margin the largest gathering of the associations since the alliance commenced holding joint sessions. It is quite probable that as many as 2,000 delegates may be in attendance and the committee in charge of arrangements is planning an unusually elaborate program of events, not only in the way of entertainment, but in the value of the subjects to be discussed. The pure food law is the most important subject on which the packers want light, and Dr. Wiley, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the pure-food expert, will be the star speaker.

The seedsmen who supply canners' stocks will be on hand in full force.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Good news! Detroit had a little sun, but hardly enough. Saturday morning a straw hat would not have felt out of place, but along toward noon a cold wind started blowing and by evening people began to wear earlaps. These sudden changes occur about every week, and, as a result, the florists are rushed with funeral work.

Roses are unusually scarce. Carnations are a little more plentiful. Considerable bulbous stock is now coming in; therefore the scarcity of roses and carnations is not so noticeable as a few weeks ago.

Various Notes.

We are wondering why the little European maple, Acer campestre, is not more universally used in ornamental grounds. It is a little tree of regular, roundish shape and very hardy. Its foliage, a beautiful, solid green, somewhat resembles a large clover leaf. Some specimens of this tree, branched from the ground up to the top, planted a few years ago in Woodlawn cemetery, attract much attention. E. Ferrand, the veteran tree culturist, says that the English maple makes a fine, compact hedge that will stand clipping in any shape.

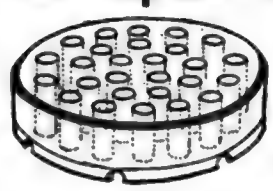
S. S. Skidelsky informs the writer that he is more than pleased with the sales of Schroeter's Rose-pink Enchantress stock. It has been found necessary to withdraw the advertisements from the trade papers, for the time being, in order to catch up with the orders.

The opening, February 2, of the fine new dry goods store of Pardridge & Blackwell called for a number of elaborate designs and baskets.

There is little enthusiasm among the stores here over McKinley day. This is probably one reason why not more carnations are sold. Several hundreds were sold over the counter. H. S.

Appleton, Wis.—B. Zuelke & Co., of Riverside greenhouse, have decided to build a $10,000 greenhouse plant in the spring.

Brookville, Ind.—Martin Weber has built a greenhouse 50x120. He will raise early vegetable and florists' miscellaneous stock.



Holdredge, Neb.—W. E. Davidson will add three greenhouses to his plant. One, 10x100, for propagating plants; one, 27x100, for propagating carnations and another, 6x100, for violets. The present building will be used principally for roses.

...THE...
Chrysanthemum
By Arthur Herrington
Formerly president Chrysanthemum Society of America.
The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. Its scope and character may be gleaned from the list of contents, which comprises chapters on composts; planting; benches, boxes or pots; general cultural details; crown and terminal buds; feeding, its object and application; care of the buds; exhibition and judging; specimen plants, plants in pots; raising from seed and hybridizing; sports; hardy chrysanthemums; chrysanthemums for south and west; insect pests and diseases; classification and selection of varieties for special purposes; history of the chrysanthemum, etc. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. Price 50c postpaid.

No Exhibition This Year.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Indiana Floral Festival and Chrysanthemum Association January 27, it was decided that no show should be held by the association this year nor until such time as a suitable hall can be obtained. An invitation had been extended to the Chrysanthemum Society of America to participate in the show that was to have been held in this city next November, but it was decided today that this invitation should be withdrawn. At the time the invitation was extended it was thought Indianapolis would have a coliseum by the time the show was to be held. The stockholders of the association decided at their meeting that there would not be a coliseum at that time, and that there was no assurance that Tomlinson hall would be available for a show.

The Indiana State Florists' Association had passed resolutions to aid in every way the show that was to have been held in November. At the meeting today it was decided to contribute $50 toward the guarantee fund for the national flower show at Chicago in 1908.

The following officers were elected: President, F. L. Mayer; vice-president, F. M. Ayres; treasurer, William Milholland; general manager, John Bertermann; secretary, Irwin Bertermann.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

THE landscape architects are all busy with plans for spring work.

FIRE January 26 destroyed the residence of John M. Miller, at Decherd, Tenn.

A MAN named Rose is chairman of the committee on horticulture in the lower house of the Illinois legislature.

THE landscape features of the Jamestown Exposition will be elaborate by comparison with those of other similar fairs, and by comparison with the exposition as a whole.

"The Gipsy Moth and How to Contral It" is the title of Farmers' Bulletin No. 275, by L. O. Howard, just issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

E. S. WELCH, proprietor of the Mount Arbor Nurseries, Shenandoah, Ia., has gotten out a neat little folder containing cuts of the various department buildings.

WALTER BUTLER, Chillicothe, O., who recently sold out his greenhouse plant to C. A. Johnson, of Chicago, has purchased a piece of property on which he will start a nursery.

IT is reported that Frank Heinl, of Jacksonville, Ill., is thinking of going into the nursery business on a rather extensive scale. He is a member of the state legislature and of its committee on horticulture.

C. H. ALLEN, of Rochester, Minn., wants it understood that Rochester, N. Y., is not "the only pebble on the beach" in the nursery business. As yet the Minnesota city's nursery interests do not rival those of the Flour City, but Mr. Allen's business is growing steadily.

IT is reported that a nursery is to be started at Joliet, Ill., land having already been rented. A corporation with $20,000 capital will be formed. T. C. Shepherd is to be the practical man and L. H. Hyde the office manager. Colonel Bennitt is reported to be interested in the project.

THIS is the first season for the Blue Earth County Nursery, Mankato, Minn., but they have booked quite a little busines for spring delivery through a 40-page catalogue. The names of the officers, Ole Andengaard and M. L. Gjestrum, are a guarantee of a persistence which will eventually result in a good business.

THE 1907 seed catalogue of Montgomery Ward & Co., Chicago, devotes 21 pages to nursery stock, with the statement, "you will be glad to know we have arranged to supply you with trees, etc., from one of the best nurseries in the country—our nursery is located about twenty miles from Chicago; it has been in operation fifty years."

No tree for city planting has made more rapid progress in public esteem these last few years than has Salisburia adiantifolia, the ginkgo, or maidenhair tree. It is not only immune from the ordinary attacks of insects but endures unnatural conditions better than most. It is in request for planting along the narrow strips of sod between sidewalk and pavement in cities.

TENNESSEE NURSERYMEN MEET.

The second annual meeting of the Tennessee State Nurserymen's Association was held at Nashville, January 30, the morning session at the Toulane hotel, the afternoon session at the University of Tennessee, and in the evening a smoker with the agricultural committees of both branches of the state legislature, at which there was informal discussion of the horticultural laws of the state.

Papers were read as follows: "Why Retail Nurserymen Should Push the Sale, Through Their Agents, of Light Grades of Nursery Stock, Especially One-Year Apple," by J. C. Hale; "Problems to Be Solved by the Fruit Growers of Tennessee," by R. A. Wilkes, of Culleoka; "Packing and Shipping Nursery Stock," by H. Nicholson, of Winchester; "Pear Blight," by J. A. Foreman, of Sylvia; "The Growing of Pears in the Nursery and Their Care in the Orchard," by W. H. Smith, of Franklin.

Officers were reëlected, as follows: President, J. C. Hale, Winchester; secretary, G. M. Bently, Nashville. In his talk on pushing the sale of young stock in preference to older trees, President Hale said he had had several years' experience on the road as a salesman of nursery stock, and it was his experience that the agent could sell what he tried most to sell. It is his opinion that the one-year tree is better for both nurserymen and planter, as it is cheaper to produce, and as a rule more one-year plants out of any given number will live than will two-year plants. The stock is suited to this climate and, generally speaking, better results are received from it.

A general discussion followed the talk, during which many members took part. The question was thoroughly aired. Some were of the opinion that better results could be obtained by the use of the one-year plant, while others found objections. It was admitted that the one-year tree had its disadvantages as well as its advantages, but the majority of those who took part in the discussion favored it.

3 NEW CANNAS

WILLIAM SAUNDERS

The flowers are large, of splendid form, and are borne very freely in immense clusters. The color is a deep rich shining scarlet slightly dappled with crimson. Foliage is a rich bronze. Height, 3½ to 4 feet. We believe that Wm. Saunders is decidedly the most perfect Canna of this type that has been introduced. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

OTTAWA

Is a strong grower, very robust and 5 to 6 feet high. The flowers are large and beautifully formed, color is carmine with tints of old rose and deep coral, add to this the silken sheen and you can imagine the effect a few plants will produce.

NOTE—We had this Canna on trial among the Canadian experimental stations last summer and this is the official report of their expert: "Quite distinct and one of the most beautiful shades of color I ever saw in Cannas. Of 70 massed in one bed during the past season, this was the most floriferous in the collection, coming into bloom early and continuing until cut down by frost, as many as 13 expanded heads of blooms being counted at one time on a plant, and not a poor one among them, all being of immense size." 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

NEW YORK

Has the Orchid type of flower. They have much more substance than the flowers of the other varieties of this class, and will stand the hot sunshine as well as the toughest varieties of cannas. The color is a solid rich scarlet covered with a beautiful glowing sheen. The flowers are large and contrast beautifully with the dark bronze foliage. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.: $35.00 per 100.

Send for our list and prices of 60 other leading varieties of Cannas.

THE ECLIPSE GRAPE.

"Some fifteen years ago," says E. A. Riehl, of Alton, Ill., "hoping to produce a red or black grape having the good qualities of the Niagara, I gathered a lot of seed of that variety where it was likely it had been cross-pollenized with other good varieties, and sowed it, producing several thousand seedlings. These were closely watched during the first season, and all that did not look promising destroyed. About fifty of the most promising were planted. When they came into bearing such as promised well enough were given numbers, and have been grown since to determine their true value, it being the intention to retain none unless it promised to fill some want better than any other grape now in cultivation. After ten years' trial No. 10, now named Eclipse, is the only one that I think fills a place better than any other in cultivation. Some of the others are good grapes, and had they been produced twenty-five years ago, would have been considered acquisitions. Some were fine growers, healthy and productive, but the fruit not good enough, others had good quality, but not productive; others again had no fault except weak foliage. The color of Eclipse is black, bunch and berry medium, earlier than any other that I have ever grown, and I have tested all varieties sent out the past forty years. Quality is the best; it has the good quality of its parent, Niagara, of hanging on the vine a long time after it is ripe without deteriorating in quality, and does not crack in wet weather like so many otherwise good grapes. The vine is a good, healthy grower, holding its foliage until after heavy frost. It has never been injured in the least by winter's cold. It is a good bearer. If it has any fault, I have not discovered it. I believe it merits a place in every collection for earliness and high quality, and should prove valuable where other varieties do not ripen owing to shortness of the season."

SIDEWALK TREES.

Among the many varieties of trees for sidewalk planting in California there are none more suitable under ordinary conditions than the various varieties of nut trees. In many sections they have been planted quite extensively and much satisfaction has been derived from them.

Among the first on the list the walnut should be mentioned. Under favorable circumstances the tree attains an immense size. Specimens over sixty feet high, with a spread of over 100 feet, make them most effective objects. The walnut prefers a loamy, rich soil, finding its greatest luxuriance in the bottom lands in our seacoast country. It is practically free from insect pests and when once established requires little pruning, unless for the purpose of shaping the tree, or cutting off those branches which show an inclination to grow downward. Interfering branches in later years should be removed, but care must be taken to not over-prune. Of the best varieties to plant it is probable that the California black walnut makes the most suitable tree. It is of exceedingly rapid growth and is indigenous to both the central and northern parts of the state.

The almond has also found much favor here as a sidewalk tree. It is of fairly quick growth and requires a light, warm, well-drained situation, where there is no liability of an excess of moisture. In training, it should be handled like the peach, for the first three years, to secure a well-shaped tree. After that there should be no cutting done unless to remove objectionable branches. It buds and blooms quite early in the season and it is occasionally nipped by spring frosts, but these do not interfere to any extent with its growth.

The well-known Spanish chestnut is another of our valuable trees for sidewalk planting and its symmetrical shape, quick growth and heavy green foliage make it ideal for that purpose. It does not like pruning and much care must be taken if branches have to be cut. It grows naturally symmetrical, however, and can always be relied upon to stand erect.

Where there is sufficient moisture to spare, the seedling pecans have made satisfactory road trees and are of quite distinct growth from anything we have had here previously. They like shelter to some extent, until they are well started, when, if the soil does not dry out too much in the summer time, they will make a heavy growth.

The eastern butternut resembles our walnut to some extent and is of equally vigorous growth, with a wide spreading top and grayish bark. Like the walnut, it does not stand much trimming and only unruly branches should be cut.

This rule applies to all the nut trees to a great extent and can be generally followed. The only objection to the use of these trees for sidewalk planting is that they take up considerable room on the sidewalk and will not admit of much pruning; but as far as beauty is concerned we have nothing to excel them and an avenue of any of the above mentioned varieties is a sight to be remembered. SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The excessive moisture of the last three weeks has given way to bright sunshine and warm nights and we are in line to have an abundance of outdoor stock in a few days. Daffodils are already commencing to make their appearance and narcissi of various kinds are at their height. Violets are plentiful and cheap and are being used in large quantities for all purposes. A few Marie Louise and Swanley White are seen, but the Princess seems to fill all requirements.

Of indoor stock there has been an abundance for several days and from present indications there will be no shortage for some time. Carnations are good and, although they are not being cut to the limit of capacity, they are in good quantity. Of roses there is still a slight scarcity and but little fancy stock is seen. Brides have been scarce since the first of the year, but in the line of Bridesmaids and Beauties, there is little to complain of.

Valley moves slowly, as do all varieties of bulbous stock. We have had much trouble since the first of the year to get sufficient quantities of ferns and asparagus to supply the wants of the retailers.

Business has only been fair with the retailers for the last two weeks. The weather, until the present week, has been unfavorable for transient trade and all the dealers have to rely on is funeral work. This has been fully up to the record of former years.

Various Notes.

D. McKeany, the well-known Irvington nurseryman, is in town.

A visit to the nurseries of F. Ludemann shows great activity in out-of-town shipments. Great quantities of ornamentals are handled at this place, as well as Japanese imported stock.

The scarcity of coal continues and the growers who depend on it for their heat have been put to much inconvenience. A majority of the wholesalers, however, are using oil as fuel.

Wild maidenhair has made its appearance and it is in the nature of a godsend to the retailers. Never have adiantum and asparagus been so scarce as this season and relief is now in sight, which will tide over until we again have plenty of tame maidenhair. G.

from the market, at least for this season, and perhaps permanently. During the last few weeks of dark weather it has shown an inclination to contract a disease which if allowed to get any headway would speedily ruin it for commercial growing. The strain of dissemination and subjection to changed methods of culture would undoubtedly cause it to go to pieces right away, and knowing the circumstances it would be unjust to the variety and the trade to let it go out. We will continue to grow it as our main crimson, and if it throws off the disease entirely we may let it go out later, but not until we feel assured that it will trot, and be a credit to us. While we regret this very much, we are grateful that it showed this weakness before we had begun sending out the stock.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

The market fluctuated about the same as the weather last week. The shortage of roses still continues, but carnations are coming in freely. Light colors find a good market, but colored stock, especially of inferior grades, reduces the average. Plenty of 25 cents per dozen signs are displayed in the downtown district. One florist advertised carnations at that figure in one of the daily papers during the week. This is low for midwinter, and nearly all commodities on the rise.

Various Notes.

N. J. Rupp, of the Moninger Co., and a representative of the Advance Ventilator Co., were in the city during the week, looking up prospective builders.

Nic Zweifel is seriously ill at his home, in North Milwaukee. He had just returned from Toronto and was taken ill soon after arriving home.

Bulb stock is now beginning to arrive in larger quantities.

NEW CASTLE, IND.

The South Park Floral Co., whose greenhouses cover four blocks in this city, will build no more on their present site, but are casting about for a suitable place in the country. When the plant started it was out of town, but the rapid growth of the city has brought the greenhouses down town, so to speak, besides which the ground on which the greenhouses are situated has become quite valuable. As new houses are needed, the company will build in the country and, little by little, will vacate the present location.

MABELLE
NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. No discount. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

A. J. GUTTMAN, The Wholesale Florist of NEW YORK 43 WEST 28TH ST. JOHN E. HAINES, BETHLEHEM, PA.

ELMIRA, N. Y.

The directors of the United States Cut Flower Co. held a meeting in the offices of the Compton Realty Co. January 30, at which it was decided to immediately increase the capacity of their plant at Elmira Heights fifty per cent. The company has eighteen greenhouses, each 200 feet long, and will add eighteen more, which will be each 100 feet long.

These new houses will be completed and ready for planting by July 1. This will give a total of 150,000 square feet of glass, and they expect later to enlarge very materially.

The officers of the company are: President and general manager, Wm. R. Compton; directors, William R. Compton, Francis Inksater, H. N. Hoffman, H. C. Mandeville and Seymour Lowman. Among the stockholders are J. Sloat Fassett, John Brand and G. L. St. Johns, president of the New York Steam Co.

The company was organized in the early part of 1903 and began business in 1906. It purchased sixty-six acres on the flats between this city and Horseheads and erected one set of houses which made it one of the largest concerns of the kind in the country.

Its business has proved to be successful, and the demand for its products has already exceeded its capacity. It does a wholesale business, solely, and deals in cut flowers throughout New York state and in Pennsylvania. It specializes in carnations, roses, Easter lilies, sweet peas, lilies of the valley, calla lilies, smilax and maidenhair fern.

It was originally incorporated for $600,000 and additional stock will be issued as fast as the company's plant is enlarged. When the total growth has been reached Elmira will become the cut-flower center of New York state.

Mr. Compton stated that Elmira is excellently located for this industry. The eighteen new houses will cost $25,000.

MANCHESTER, MASS.

The North Shore Horticultural Society held its regular meeting February 1, President McGregor in the chair. The subject for discussion was "Annuals," continued from the last meeting. The 1906 entertainment committee completed its duties by providing music and refreshments for the evening. Messrs. Menken, Dodge and Morrison were appointed to succeed the old committee. The schedule for 1907 has been issued and distributed. The rose show will be held June 26 and 27 and the summer show August 28 and 29. W. T.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—John Baker, who is located about half a mile south of the city limits, suffered the loss of his greenhouse by fire Sunday morning, January 27. The value of the property destroyed was about $1,500.

DENVER.

The Market.

The retailers had no cause for complaint during the last week as everything sold out clean at good prices and there was hardly enough stock to fill orders, roses being especially scarce. Consequently there is some grumbling among the retailers.

Carnations have also felt a firmer undertone; the cut is not large and there is quite a demand. They are fine for this time of the year, though some could stand improvement in strength of stem. Lawson, Enchantress and Victory are perhaps the best.

Carnation day was observed more this year than heretofore, the papers commenting on it more this year than last. Lawson and red were mostly sought after.

Double daffodils are beginning to come on the market, and the scarcity of roses is throwing some demand on these, as well as on tulips and hyacinths.

Trade in flowering plants is good, many people turning to these in preference to cut flowers.

Green goods are light in supply, asparagus and maidenhair being the shortest and smilax not over plentiful.

Various Notes.

Despite the recent cold weather and snow on the mountains, the heron's bill, or hemlock stork's bill, is blooming just west of Manitou. This establishes a new record for floriculture in the Pike's Peak region.

The firm of the Scott Floral Co. has been dissolved, E. J. Reynolds retiring. Philip Scott will continue the business. Mr. Reynolds left last week for Seattle.

The Gallup Floral & Seed Co., of Cleveland place, is getting ready to move into a new store at 819 Sixteenth street.

FROSTED ANTIRRHINUM.

During the cold snap on January 16 my boiler burst, and I lost my crop of antirrhinums. What I want to know is, will they start again in the spring and give me a crop later, or had I better put in a boiler now and start to fire? Will it pay me to try and start them.

J. C.

The antirrhinum would probably start from the bottom again, as they withstand quite a little frost. They would break weakly, however, and we would not advise leaving them in. There are, however, other crops which might be gotten in without delay and which would pay well. A good strain of ten weeks' stock is one. Feverfew planted now would be right for Memorial day. A first-class strain of candytuft may be sown. Gladioli also could be planted and would bring remunerative prices before outdoor ones come in. We would suggest getting a new boiler right away. Many plants could be moved from other houses and soon fill the vacant one. Quantities of bedding plants could be raised from seed, and tomatoes make a profitable summer crop if it is not desired to plant flowering stock. Secure and sow a batch of Comet, Sterling Castle or some other good greenhouse tomato for this purpose. Empty houses do not pay. Get it under crop as quickly as possible. C. W.

York, Pa.—Charles A. Schaefer, who has a store on the corner of West street and Pennsylvania avenue, has opened another store at 110 East Market street. He has some exceptionally fine carnations.

Springfield, Ill.—Frank Heinl, a brother of the young men in Joseph Heinl & Sons Co., at Jacksonville, and son of the founder of that prosperous business, is a member of the house committee on appropriations and of the committee on horticulture. He is expected to be the means of getting for the florists an appropriation for greenhouses at the State Experiment Station.

The Florists' Manual

By WILLIAM SCOTT

Here is a Business Book For Business Men

SECOND EDITION

THOROUGHLY REVISED AND BROUGHT UP TO DATE

NO SCIENCE, BUT LOTS OF PRACTICAL COMMON SENSE

"Find enclosed $5 for the Florists' Manual, by William Scott. It is the best book of the age on commercial floriculture and should be in the home of every gardener."—CONRAD FORBACH, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I have several times been consulted by those who would make a beginning in the Florists' business. In each case I have said that the first step is to subscribe for a Trade Paper, and the next to procure a copy of The Florists' Manual."—J. A. VALENTINE, Pres. Park Floral Co., Denver, Colo.

No dry-as-dust botanical classifications, but tells you just how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

TELLS you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

Treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

WITH WHICH HAS BEEN INCLUDED

Greenhouse Heating.

MENDING A BOILER.

The hot water boiler installed in the plant of Fletcher C. James, at Des Plaines, Ill., gave out in zero weather. It was found that the inside shell was rusted through and a hole was found in the back of the boiler in such a position as to make it impossible to patch it. The following ingenious idea occurred to the Garland boys. An opening was drilled through the top of the boiler just over the hole. After the water was let out of the boiler a funnel was inserted and several bags of dry cement were poured in and water was immediately let into the boiler. The cement was packed down with a stick and the opening in the top closed up with a wooden plug. The boiler was found to be perfectly tight and heating was resumed.

BOILER CAPACITY.

I have an upright boiler rated to carry 800 square feet of radiation heating my dwelling house of four rooms, each averaging 12x12. In addition to this, can I heat a greenhouse 20x40 and maintain a temperature of 56 degrees in Kansas climate? I have four runs of 4-inch pipe on each side of the greenhouse, or 350 feet altogether. W. P. R.

If the boiler in question is rated to carry 800 square feet of radiation and the house is no larger than you say, the boiler working at full capacity should be able to carry the four rooms of the house and the 350 feet of 4-inch pipe. It will not be safe, however, to increase the load. This amount of piping is ample for the house in question. L. C. C.

HEATING THREE GREENHOUSES.

I am about to construct three north and south houses, each 100 feet long. The two west houses are to be connected and the other one is to be partitioned off for roses, etc. They will be heated with hot water and the boiler-room will be at the northeast corner. I would like to know if I can run a 3-inch header the width of the houses and run three 3-inch flows, one in each house, off of the main header, and if the water could be forced up hill to the other end, the returns gradually dropping to the boiler. This radiation will be sufficient in our mild climate. H. H. P.

You will get greater satisfaction from carrying each of the three flow pipes direct from the boiler. You can arrange it as you suggest, but trouble frequently occurs with pipes so arranged; the current of hot water gets started in one set of pipes and actually passes the others without heating them to amount to anything, thus giving a very uneven distribution. If each flow is taken off the boiler direct there is no chance for this uneven distribution, provided the pipes are properly graded. L. C. C.

TO IMPROVE CIRCULATION.

My new greenhouse is 26½x80, with an addition 19x20 at the rear. There are three and one-half feet of concrete and three and one-half feet of glass on each side. The houses are fifteen feet to the ridge. The potting-shed and boiler-pit are at the rear. A forcing house 16x20, five feet high on the south side and twelve feet high on the north side, joins the potting-shed on the south. I have five flows and seven returns in the greenhouse, all 3½-inch pipes. There are five open tanks at the east end. There are two flows and two returns in the forcing house and one tank. I am obliged to cut off the heat from the forcing house in order to heat the greenhouse. When it is 4 degrees above zero outdoors the thermometer registers only 40 degrees in the forcing house, the same in the east end of the greenhouse, and 48 degrees in the west end. When it is at zero outdoors it is only 48 degrees in the greenhouse, with the forcing house cut off.

I have a Model No. 5 sectional hot water heater, rated to heat 1,700 feet of 4-inch pipe. The boiler is in a pit seven feet below the flow pipes. The stack is 12x12 inches inside, and twenty-four feet high. There is a fine draught. I burn enough coal to heat a larger building. Must I get a larger boiler or put in more pipes? I would like to turn heat into the forcing house as soon as possible in order to get lilies out for Easter. H.

Your boiler should be large enough to handle the piping you have upon it if it is equal to its rated capacity. The quantity of piping in each house should maintain 60 degrees of temperature if everything were properly arranged and the circulation good. If you can take each main flow off near the boiler, instead of dividing the flows up some distance away from it, I think you will get better service. I would also suggest that the two side flow pipes which are taken off at the jog in the main house be converted into returns and that the main flow be broken up only at the east end of the house, there to return by five returns instead of three as at present. The circulation will be better with this modification. The flows supplying the side coils should each go back to the boiler and be fed from separate openings, or from a manifold close to the boiler. There is too little opportunity for the hot water to get out of the boiler with the present system of piping. If you can do away with the open tanks and place the system under pressure by using an elevated expansion tank connected to the main return close to the boiler, the tank elevated sixteen to twenty feet, you will get much greater return from your fuel and a more satisfactory plant. Look carefully to the grading of the pipe.

PIPING THREE GREENHOUSES.

We intend to build an east and west house 30x200 and to add to this, in a year or so, one or two houses of the same size. The potting-shed, with boiler-room underneath, will be 12x30 and will be at the center, so we can run the pipes each way. Does the direction in which the boiler is placed make any difference? How many openings in a No. 12 Kroeschell boiler will be required for three houses of the dimensions given? Would it be best to use 4-inch or 6-inch pipe for these outlets? Would it do to run a 6-inch pipe across the center of the house to connect all the flows and returns, 100 feet each way, with eight inches rise per hundred feet? We plan to install 3,200 feet of 4-inch pipe in each house, for Wisconsin climate.

W. W. T.

The efficiency of the boiler will not be modified by the direction it is set. The convenience of connecting the returns and the smoke-stack will determine the direction of the boiler as much as other factors, provided the pit allows sufficient room for firing and cleaning flues. A 4-inch opening for each house 30x200 feet will be sufficient. The returns can all be centered into two openings, one on either side of the boiler. If you install 2,400 lineal feet of pipe in each house it should be sufficient to maintain 70 degrees of temperature.

L. C. C.

CENTRALIA, MO.—George W. Larkan has installed a Kroeschell boiler capable of carrying 3,000 feet of 3-inch pipe.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during last week was good, especially the latter part of it, and a big run on funeral work cleaned up everything that could be worked in. Good roses and carnations are scarce, while there appears to be about enough cheaper stock to supply the demand. Violets and bulb stock are coming in quite plentifully, especially daffodils both double and single.

The death of Timothy Eaton, our merchant prince, and probably the best known man in Canada, brought a big demand for funeral work, and Torontonians saw at the family residence on Lowther avenue the greatest number of funeral designs ever put up for one funeral. It might be here remarked that it is up to the florists to impress upon the undertakers, or those in charge of handling the floral designs during and after the funeral services, the necessity of handling such designs with care and with at least a small degree of respect. The way the flowers on this occasion were handled was simply disgraceful and was noted by many present. In fact, all who had an opportunity of seeing it were of the same opinion. This will have a bad effect on florists as it will cause many to discontinue sending flowers when they are handled in this way.

Various Notes.

We are glad to welcome back an old friend, F. C. Brown, who has been for the last couple of years in Philadelphia and now comes back to take charge of Mr. Dunlop's retail store.

H. G. Dillemuth, late of Dunlop's, who has taken over the retail business of Jay & Son, of Spadian avenue, had his special opening February 2. He had the store beautifully decorated, with an orchestra in attendance. The store has been done over and is now a credit to the city. D. J.

BEAVER FALLS, PA.—John H. Meyer, who has been out of business for some time, is planning to make a fresh start.

WESTFIELD, MASS.—Henry Barton, of this place, not Huntington, is preparing to build a rose house 100x150, eighteen feet to the ridge.

BRISTOL, R. I.—Richard Dunbar and his son, George, narrowly escaped severe injuries from an explosion of illuminating gas at the greenhouses January 31. The gas was escaping from the main pipes on Hope street, and when a match was struck the explosion occurred.

How do You Know One of Our Houses Won't Help You?

Ever gone into the matter directly with us, or is it just a "think so" on your part? You feel very friendly—on the start—with the firm who, apparently, saves you money on materials—but the start is the last thing to consider instead of the first—it's a question of what that house will cost each year in repairs, what that friendship is, in the end, going to cost you. We build the house of economy—and you get pleasant dealing. So go into the matter directly with us.

Any form of greenhouse demanding frequent repairs is an expensive proposition. U-Bar greenhouses are the best greenhouses built because of the encasing of the sashbar in metal, which gives all the wood on the outside, all the iron on the inside, overcoming breakage of glass and insuring an almost indefinite life to the house. PEOPLE who know a good thing when they see it, and will take advantage of the same, must be possessed with good judgment and are generally successful. One of our successful growers has this year taken out 6000 feet of wooden gutters, which were only 5 years old, and replaced the same with 6000 feet of the GARLAND IRON GUTTER, this being his fifth annual order.

There is a Deal of Talk About Sap Free Cypress, and it's safe to say not nine out of ten men who buy cypress materials can tell by its look whether it's sap free or not.

Now there are two kinds of sap in Cypress—the blue sap that anyone can see and which rots out at once—and the white sap which looks just as solid, cuts just like the sound wood, and requires an expert to detect it. 20 per cent of cypress is apt to be sappy—we cut out and burn up that 20 per cent.

When you order materials from us you don't get "firsts" in one part and odds and ends of "seconds" worked up in the small, less "in sight parts." It's a straight, top-notch quality from start to finish.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Geraniums.

Flowering plants for Easter are requiring more and more room each day, and to give them the necessary space is a temptation to crowd the bedding plants more closely. Especially is this true of geraniums. If you want nice, salable plants they must have room. They are speedily ruined by overcrowding. Those potted early in the year will now have the pots well filled with roots. Top cuttings taken from these and placed in small pots or a propagating bed with a fair bottom heat will soon root, but care must be taken not to overwater them. They will soon rot if sprinkled daily, as carnations or chrysanthemums are. Usually a good soaking when inserted should carry them until rooted.

If cuttings are not needed, merely pinch the tops out, if bushy plants are needed. Do it while the plants are growing actively and not while repotting them. The temptation is strong to kill the two birds with one stone, but it does not pay. If early potted stock is becoming well rooted give a shift to 3½-inch or 4-inch pots. Use a light but fairly rich compost for this purpose.

Pelargoniums.

These beautiful and attractive plants, often spoken of as Lady Washington geraniums, are not much grown commercially and have never attained in America the immense popularity they enjoy in Europe. Their flowering season here is shorter, owing to our hotter summers, but as they remain in bloom for some two months they are well worth growing. They prefer a cool house and at this season, unless especially early flowers are needed, the most prominent shoots should be pinched back. As green aphis has a special fondness for them, keep some tobacco stems among the pots. These plants are naturally at their best in May and June and around Memorial day are especially useful. Their flowers work in nicely in bouquets.

There are now some fine varieties of fancy pelargoniums. A few good sorts to grow are Crimson King, Lady Carrington, Mme. Thibaut, Dr. Masters, H. M. Stanley, Mrs. R. Sandiford and Duchess of Cornwall.

Heliotropes.

The present is a good time to put in a batch of cuttings of that sweet and most useful plant, the heliotrope. They root quickly in a warm house and, potted along, will make fine stuff in 4-inch pots before bedding plant sales start in. For window-box, vase, or bedding out purposes heliotropes are most satisfactory, while nicely flowered plants in pots are always salable.

Lemon Verbena.

If any old plants of lemon verbena have been stored in a cool house and kept on the dry side during winter, the present is an opportune time to prune them back and place in a warm house, where they will soon make a crop of nice cuttings. These soft shoots root readily when rubbed off with a heel. Some people imagine this is a hard plant to propagate. It is, when ripe or half-ripened wood is used, but soft cuttings take root as freely as heliotropes.

Jerusalem Cherries.

If you want a batch of nice, bushy Jerusalem cherries in 6-inch pots for Christmas sales, sow seed now. Probably you have saved one or two berries which will give you just as fine plants as any you can buy. Pot off into 3-inch pots when large enough, gradually harden off, plant outside in an open, sunny spot early in May, lift and pot about the middle of August, and you will have some stock to be proud of. Cuttings root readily, but while they make plants which ripen the berries a little earlier, they have not the neat, bushy habit of the seedlings.

Salvia Splendens.

While it is still somewhat early to sow seeds of the popular scarlet sage, if good sized plants are desired a sowing can be made at any time. Some florists prefer to keep over a few old plants and take cuttings from these. Of course these will make nice plants and will start to flower ahead of the seedlings. Our experience has been, however, that they lack the vigor of seedlings and their blooming season is ended before frost comes, especially if we get a prolonged, open fall, while seedling plants will be found flowering up to November. The seed catalogues list a number of forms of Salvia splendens, some of which are much dwarfer than the type. All are good, although we have failed to notice any difference in some of them except the name.

Coleus and Alternantheras.

While the severe winter continues and a brisk bottom heat can be had, it is a good time to put in a batch of cuttings of coleus and alternanthera, which are always in more or less demand. Throw away the old coleus plants, which seem to be favorite lurking places for mealy bug. From cuttings put in now coleus may be potted off within two weeks and kept in a warm house they will speedily give a crop of tips for cuttings.

Easter Lilies.

Lent is now with us and it is possible to tell with some degree of certainty how lilies are going to be for Easter. From present appearances a large number will not be in flower unless we get a warm March, or the plants are subjected to sweltering heat. If the buds are now visible you are all right, provided the plants are kept in a temperature of 55 degrees at night. Where the buds are still hidden, give the plants as warm and sunny a location as possible. Spray two or three times a day and give them a little sulphate of ammonia or nitrate of soda once a week when watering. Remember that lily plants and flowers lose half their value when Easter has gone and it therefore pays to watch the plants closely now.

Wreath of Orchids and Adiantum, by B. Schroeter, Detroit.

Hybrid Roses.

Plants carrying half a dozen or more buds and flowers of Brunner, Jacq., Louizet and other well-known and popular hybrid perpetual roses make popular Easter plants. To get them in to a nicety is rather a difficult problem. Plants should now have broken and made shoots several inches in length, on which buds should be visible towards the end of the month. Similar treatment can be given to Crimson and Baby Ramblers. Sixty degrees at night now and cooler conditions later will bring them on in season. It is not necessary or desirable to have the flowers all open when selling them. One or two expanded blossoms and a few buds to follow will please your customers much better.

THE AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

[An address by P. J. Lynch, of West Grove, Pa., before the Washington Florists' Club, February 5.]

It has been suggested that I give a general talk with reference to the American Rose Society, what it has accomplished in the past, and what it expects to do in this city. I will give you no occasion for alarm in thinking that I intend to read an exhaustive essay, because I feel that all of you are aware of the splendid work the society has done in advancing the welfare of the rose. In these few notes I hope to cover briefly the scope of the society and enlist the earnest and enthusiastic support, not only of the members of your club, but your friends outside of the florists' profession as well.

Purposes of Organization.

The American Rose Society was established in 1899, with the broad purpose in view of extending the popularity of the rose among commercial growers as well as amateurs; to increase the general interest in its cultivation; to impress the standard of excellence; to foster, stimulate and increase the production in every possible way of improved varieties suitable to our American climate. Since its inception it has made steady progress, until now the announcement of an exhibition under the auspices of the society attracts interested growers and spectators from all parts of the country. It may be safely said that at the last exhibition, held in Boston, there was perhaps shown the most magnificent collection of roses, embracing almost every class, ever staged in this country. At that meeting Mr. Sander, of St. Albans, England, remarked in his address: "If the exhibition I see here could be transferred to our Horticultural hall in London I am sure it would create a profound sensation. Your American Beauty and Richmond are as good, if not better, than any I have ever seen."

The society exhibitions have been instrumental in bringing about a keen but friendly rivalry between our commercial growers, and the value of this is readily apparent, because it stimulates the grower to give the growing of his plants that attention necessary to bring them to the highest degree of perfection, for the purpose of exhibition, thereby increasing the productiveness of his business in cash returns. Then, too, in setting a higher standard of excellence he advances the popularity of the rose by bringing forth its wonderful possibilities. Instead of going about his work in a careless manner, the grower, if he be interested in the progress of the society, will seek to outdo his brother grower in results, with the two-fold advantage of which I have spoken. This is the monetary view of the good the society has done, and apart from this commercial phase it has brought where the rose-loving public may see, the creations of the rose world.

These exhibitions are productive of benefits even to the grower who does not exhibit, but who in order to compete in the open market must perforce grow first-class flowers to hold his own. In short, our society is the harbinger of better prices for every grower.

While we do not have the great number of new roses that the European growers exhibit at their great shows, yet we are steadily improving in the creation of new varieties, as has been well testified to in the last three years, during which time there have been more new roses of merit introduced by American growers than, perhaps, in a decade previous to that time.

Interest in Hybridizing.

Interest in hybridization has been stimulated, and while the work differs materially from that with carnations, inasmuch as the latter flower responds so readily to the efforts at improvement, yet we are proud of the many new varieties that have first seen the light of day in America and have been shown at the exhibitions of the American Rose Society.

Then again, in this branch of the work the necessity for roses that will adapt themselves to our varying climate has been clearly shown, and by intelligent efforts we have accomplished something we have never had before, and that is the creation of roses to suit the planter of the south as well as the grower in the north, not only for the commercial florists, but especially for the amateur growers, who after all are first to be considered, because if we can enlist the support of the great masses of amateur rose growers in all parts of the country by helping them to succeed, we know not to what extent the power and influence may extend in beautifying our land and increasing the revenues of our growers.

We have found by experience that out of the multitude of new roses sent us from Europe there are few that have adapted themselves to our climatic conditions, so that it would seem to be the cardinal work of this society to demonstrate that which is best and that which is not best for professionals and amateurs alike, and this can only be accomplished by unity of action among growers, enthusiastic love for the rose, and a spirit that what is good for one of us is good for all.

The wants of the buyers of our product vacillate from time to time, and in order to keep abreast of the times and secure flowers that will bring the best price we must needs have some means of acquiring this knowledge, as well as of disseminating it. While Bride, Bridesmaid, Golden Gate and tea roses of similar character, whose popularity has not diminished because of the increased number of people who buy, yet it would seem, to touch upon this subject briefly, that as ex-President Montgomery of this society very aptly stated that the rose of the future will undoubtedly be raised from a mixture of the tea and hybrid perpetual, producing a hybrid tea of the type of Tom Fields and Queen Beatrice, your home roses; Richmond, Liberty, Miss Kate Moulton and others, all roses of the hybrid tea class, because of their high and positive colors, which are now so much wanted. Then, too, these roses require more skill in growing, which means more attention, resulting in the very condition spoken of previously, that the grower secures in the end a greater return for his labor than he could hope to do were we to continue to be satisfied with the favorites of former years. So much for what the society has tried to do in the past.

Fern Pans for Decoration No dining room or home is complete without ferns, as they add so much to the appearance of the room. The water should never be allowed to stand in the outer jardiniere. Keep in the light, but out of the sunshine. Water the soil daily, allotting to each pan about half a pint of water. Sprinkle the foliage morning and evening. When ferns are kept in a place where temperature is not above 50 degrees, the soil will require watering but once in two days. Asparagus Plumosus is the hardiest and most used variety but there are other beautiful kinds for filling fern pans.

For preservation of Cut Flowers and the care of Decorative Plants, a rubber hand sprinkler is almost indispensable. They make watering and spraying an easy task and accomplish it effectively. Such a sprinkler can be purchased for $1.00.

Decorative Plants All decorative plants should have jardinieres, both for decorative and practical purposes. They serve to hold the excess water. A little sand placed in the bottom of the jardiniere will keep the roots moist and cool. With almost all decorative plants, the soil should be watered once daily and the foliage twice. About once a week Palms, Rubber Plants and all other decorative plants with thick foliage should be washed with a sponge on both sides of the leaves in clear water. Every two weeks a washing with whale oil soap will be found beneficial. Palms, Ferns, and almost all decorative plants require protection from the extreme hot rays of the sun, although the Rubber Plant, when plunged in the open ground in the pot or tub in which it has been growing, will thrive most luxuriantly in the sunshine. Give plenty of water.

Everybody Loves Flowers The love of flowers and plants is a primal instinct in the human family, and evidences a need that should be supplied just as surely as the demand for learning is gratified. Children, particularly, should be brought in contact with them and encouraged to care for them, and no home or schoolroom is complete without some growing plant. It is a well understood fact, recognized by the medical profession, that the existence of plants is conducive to the health of children as well as adults. They supply oxygen for the room.

Advertising for Retailers.

There are few people who get the fullest value or enjoyment possible out of cut flowers, ferns, palms and other decorative plants, simply through lack of knowledge of how to care for them. This fact is all the more surprising when it is realized that their care requires no scientific knowledge and demands so little attention.

Flowers for Dining Tables The height of a floral decoration for a dinner table should be from 10 to 15 inches. At large banquets a greater height is permissible. The best form is to limit the flowers to one variety, although two may be permitted. Each bouquet may consist of from 6 to 24 flowers. Roses or Carnations are always satisfactory, but at certain seasons Tulips, Narcissus, Daffodills, Hyacinths, Peonies, Gladioli, Asters, Dahlias, or Chrysanthemums may be used. When a low table decoration is preferred, Sweet Peas, Lily of Valley, or Violets fill the requirements.

In any floral decoration overcrowding and stiffness should be avoided. Try to secure a carelessly graceful arrangement, permitting every flower to preserve its own individuality.

Asparagus, Maiden Hair, or Dagger Ferns should be strewn on the tables, while here and there should be scattered a few Roses, Carnations or seasonable flowers. For a souvenir, one flower should be laid at each guest's plate. Clusters may be used for ladies.

The color of flowers should always harmonize, or at least not antagonize, the effect of the surroundings. Red and yellow are enlivening; deep red Roses or Carnations restful and luxurious. Pink and white are both pleasing.

Flower Vases Flower vases should be of not too narrow a base, of a design to hold the most water possible, consistent with style that is artistic and beautiful. A very satisfactory vase of pressed glass, 12 inches high, 4 inches in diameter at the base, 6 inches at the top, may be purchased for 50 cents. It will hold from 12 to 24 flowers.

Goldfish Globes, 4 or 6 inch sizes, make excellent vases for short-stemmed flowers, showing stems, foliage and flowers of Sweet Peas, Violets, Orchids, Lily of Valley, and Pansies.

Greens for Decorating Asparagus Ferns in strings are the most satisfactory, as well as beautiful. The warm atmosphere of a room does not affect them so readily as other kinds. Smilax is also used, while Wild Smilax and autumn leaves serve in their respective seasons. About the base of a mantel, grille or console may be grouped a few decorative plants.

Care of Cut Flowers Flowers are usually cut in the bud, or at least before the bloom has fully matured. They are then placed in jars of water in a room where the temperature is about 40 to 50 degrees. An ice box may be used. Flowers thus cared for will continue to develop and expand for several days.

Preserving Bouquets Flowers used on dining tables, mantels, etc., may be preserved for use the following day if properly handled. After using they should be immersed in water 5 or 10 minutes, the stems clipped about ¼ inch, then drained and wrapped in tissue or news paper to keep the air from the petals; then put in jars, stone preferred, large enough to hold sufficient water to cover the stems entirely, and put in an ice box. The following morning will find them, to all appearances, as fresh as the preceding day.

Saucer Bouquets Where is the man or woman who does not remember the saucer bouquets mother use to make? The late President McKinley liked all kinds of flowers, but the carnation was his favorite. He often remarked that all the magnificent floral decorations supplied by the White House greenhouse could not rival the saucer bouquets from his mother's little flower garden.

To arrange a saucer bouquet, fill saucer or plate with sand, elevating the center. Press with the hand and water thoroughly. Then, immerse the flowers or leaves in the water for 5 minutes, drain, shake and arrange in the saucer to suit the fancy, covering the sand first with leaves to form a background. Always press the sand well around the stems of each flower or leaf. Afterwards water again. Keep out of sun, but in the light, in a room where temperature is kept as cool as possible.

Plans for Annual Meeting.

Now as to what it may expect to do in the future and in this city. The subject is one that I would not attempt to outline, because it is entirely dependent upon the combined effort of the growers, what may be accomplished. If the society goes forward as rapidly in the future as it has in the past it will accomplish a wonderful good for everyone engaged in the florists' business, not to speak of the great masses of people outside of the florists' trade who are interested in roses. My purpose in being with you is more to ask that the Florists' Club of Washington will give us that earnest support that we know it will, feeling that in doing so we are helping each other. We want more members, not only florists but those outside the trade, and in order to make the exhibition here a success let us bend every possible effort to increase the membership of the society and stimulate public interest in our efforts, and with your hearty coöperation we shall have, without doubt, the best meeting and most attractive exhibition ever given by the Rose Society.

As to what we expect to do at the forthcoming exhibition in our city, I am unable to give a list of the number of prizes to be offered, but you may depend upon it that there will be a splendid showing. In Boston, if I recall properly, we had about fifty prizes, cups and cash, with over 100 competitors. Our president, Mr. Simpson, at the meeting of the executive committee a few days ago in New York, informed us that there would be more prizes and of greater value offered this year than ever before, and this list will be ready for publication in a short time. It is yet early for entries, but with your coöperation I feel safe in saying that this will be one of the greatest exhibitions ever held in this country. I would specially ask that if possible the Washington society people be asked to donate some special premiums, to be published in the supplementary list, in order that we may secure their hearty coöperation in bringing the attendance up to the highest mark.

I shall be glad to answer any question I can in regard to the number of vases required, the height of the benches and give such information as I have at command, and before closing these remarks let me again urge your club to give us the best hand you can in order to push the good work forward, so that it may be said that the Washington exhibition far outshone that which has become so famous held in Boston last year.

GERMINATION OF SEEDS.

Seeds are dependent for germination on definite amounts of heat, moisture, oxygen and the absence of light, says the publicity department of the National Council of Horticulture. The amount of oxygen supplied regulates itself, if the seeds are planted in any soil that will readily admit air. The regulation of heat and moisture is most important, and is well under control. Among seeds that germinate quickly are most of the annuals, while the seeds of trees, shrubs and most of the herbaceous perennials require a longer time. The most delicate seeds are not always the smallest, although small seeds require careful handling after germination has begun, because of their size.

As seeds are started with enough food to enable them to develop a certain length of shoot and root it is not necessary to have the soil in which to sow them very rich, but it is important that it have good drainage and at the same time does not dry up too rapidly. A mixture containing equal parts of loam, leaf-soil, or peat, with a good sprinkling of sand, will give best results, except for seeds which require special treatment. It is a good plan, often practiced, to sterilize the soil by thorough steaming or baking, which destroys all seeds of weeds, insects' eggs, fungi, etc., that may be in the soil.

In preparing soil for planting seeds it should be passed through a coarse screen to remove lumps. If the seeds are to be sown in pots the latter should be cleaned and a few pieces of broken pots placed in the pot for drainage. Fill the pots with the soil, making the surface firm and level. If the seeds are very small, sift fine soil on top and immerse the pots in water, giving them a thorough soaking and allowing them to drain well before sowing the seeds. The latter should be scattered on the surface, not covered. Watch the pot carefully to keep it uniformly moist. Cover it with a pane of clear glass, removing it to admit air, and keep in a temperature of 60 to 70 degrees.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

PROFITABLE ADVERTISING.

For a Retail Florist.

In these days of competition and rivalry the retail florist should study the needs and cater to the wants of his patrons. Everybody loves flowers, but a great many people refrain from purchasing plants and cut flowers simply on account of a lack of knowledge of how to take care of them.

One of the best advertisements for a retail florist is to always keep an attractive and effective show window display, changing the arrangement twice a week, or at least once.

If the people passing can be induced to admire your windows some article may suit their fancy and they are induced to enter your store and seek information regarding its cost, use or care. These inquiries consume the time of the salesman and frequently do not lead to immediate sales.

About seventy-five per cent of the inquirers leave the store, promising to return later and purchase. Verbal information which has been imparted to them is soon forgotten. A little folder or booklet presented to the departing inquirer serves as a further reminder of the object in view at the time they entered your store, and it also supplies additional information at a time when the recipient is in a receptive mood for acquiring knowledge pertaining to flowers.

My experience has been that about ninety per cent of all customers make inquiries or seek information about plants, cut flowers or some novelty carried by the florist. Each person entering your store is good, on the average, for three questions. If you have from twenty-five to 100 customers daily and each asks three questions, it is easily computed how many replies you will have made.

Time is money to the florist. Anything that expedites waiting on customers or assists in answering their questions helps him make money. It gives inquiring prospective customers desirable and useful information which they have been seeking.

The little folder, "Care of Cut Flowers, Palms and Ferns," was written and published in an endeavor to instruct, answer questions daily asked of a florist, and assist in aiding customers to decide the kind of flowers they wish to use for certain occasions.

I have found the little folders very productive in securing new business, as well as stimulating business from old customers.

The flower purchasing public has not been supplied with specific information by the retail florist to the extent that they have a right to expect. They haven't the time or disposition to read lengthy dissertations on the technical phases of the question. The folder seems to supply just what the public wants. It contains about 1,200 words. It is concise and practical and only takes about two minutes to read.

The title page is an arrangement of ferns in neat design, the whole being printed in green ink upon a light shade of green paper of good quality.

As an advertising proposition it has justified my greatest expectations. It is exceptionally profitable and brings immediate returns. Horace R. Hughes.

A CANADIAN DESIGN.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph made at the establishment of Thomas A. Ivey, at Brantford, Ont. It represents a large design made recently by Mr. Ivey for the funeral of the late Colonel Cameron, of the Dufferin Rifles. The honorary colonel of the regiment was the late Lord Dufferin, who was formerly governor general of Canada. The motto of his family is "Per vias rectas," meaning through right paths. This was lettered on the design in immortelles. The shield was made solid with white carnations, the spray being of Sunset roses, valley and adiantum, and was the particularly effective part of the design. The shield was attached to an easel, which does not show in the picture. It stood five feet high.

Shield on Easel made by T. A. Ivey, Brantford, Ont.

Mr. Ivey has published a neat booklet of his designs, which he sends out to prospective buyers and hands to visitors. It is especially good for securing mail orders.

A DECORATOR'S AID.

The plant stand shown in the accompanying illustrations is not a new invention. It has been used by the George Wittbold Co., Chicago, for fifteen years, but it never has been offered to the trade, although every now and then some florist sees the stands in use and wants a few of them to use in his own decorative work. The illustrations show the front and the back view of a group of plants arranged with the aid of the stand, which really is a combination plant stand and vase. The picture shows the shape and character of the stand without making necessary any further description than that it is made of galvanized iron, light and strong. The two funnel-like sections are made to slip apart, so that the stands may be telescoped to occupy less space. When telescoped a dozen stands occupy no more space than does one in the position for use. As shown, a considerable group of plants may be arranged on one stand. Blocks made for tilting the pots of the plants at the base of the stand are made of iron in various sizes, to hold different sizes of pots securely. With the aid of this outfit any size of plant may be used and any plant in the group may be tipped to any angle desired.

MR. WILCOX VISITS TEXAS.

J. F. Wilcox, the well-known grower of Council Bluffs, Iowa, has just returned from a three weeks' tour through Texas, and as his knowledge of land values, climate, chemical qualities of the soil, moisture, rainfall, etc., is that of an expert on subjects of that sort, his opinion of Texas, or at least those portions of it he visited, are of more than ordinary interest and value.

"I spent some time at San Antonio," said Mr. Wilcox, "made two visits at Cotulla, went west as far as Eagle Pass and eastward as far as Corpus Christi on the gulf coast. Texas is a state of a great variety of soils, soils that are of variable value and adapted to a great range of vegetation. This fact is developing more and more every day as the state is becoming more thickly settled and a scientific knowledge is being obtained of its agricultural possibilities. It must be remembered that a great portion of southwestern Texas has lain dormant, only awaiting the touch of skilled husbandry to develop it.

"Cotton is, of course, to Texas what corn is to Iowa, but there are other crops that will net the farmer much larger returns, provided he is successful in marketing his product. The successful cultivation of watermelons and Bermuda onions is assured. Watermelons can be grown at little expense and without irrigation, and if the grower is successful in getting his crop on the market early it will net him a handsome profit. The Bermuda onions require irrigation. This means a large initial investment, but, in my opinion, under irrigation the returns to the grower are much more profitable, as the demand seems almost unlimited. The onion growers are organized much on the same plan adopted by the grape growers of Council Bluffs, and with such an organization they will be able to command higher prices in the future than they have been getting."

When Mr. Wilcox goes out on a land-hunting expedition he goes equipped for business. His is no superficial survey. He consults government weather reports for statistics on wind, rainfall, etc., carries a spade and an auger with which to test soils, and is an inveterate interviewer, gathering information from every source possible as he proceeds.

"What do you think of Texas land as an investment," was asked Mr. Wilcox.

"Carefully selected Texas land," replied Mr. Wilcox, "cannot but be an excellent investment. Any good land in the state that is located within a reasonable distance of the market will be worth $20 to $25 an acre in another year. But land is not the only thing in which investments can be profitably made in that state. At Corpus Christi there are hundreds of acres of cabbage, cauliflower and cucumbers that are grown for the northern markets and are netting the growers a handsome profit. While there I saw orange trees loaded with fruit. At San Antonio the parks are beautiful and roses are in bloom now, and while I was there we enjoyed real summer weather. We bought our newspapers on the streets from barefooted boys and read them on the hotel veranda. It was my first trip south and it was certainly an interesting one to me."

TROUBLE WITH VIOLETS.

I am having trouble in my violet house with a small black or brown fly that seems to be in the soil as well as on the plants; in fact, they are all over. I have fumigated with tobacco stems several times with little or no effect. There are also quite a number of white and yellow maggots in the soil. Some of the plants are in good condition, while others seem to be dying. The plants seem to be slow in budding; some of the strongest are not blooming at all. The soil is not very good, as I was late in getting started, and I didn't have time to prepare it. I simply dug it up and mixed three loads with one of manure and put it in the benches.

E. W. G.

You have my sympathy in your troubles. As it is getting so late in the season that you would not get them in good order to bloom, even if you treated them successfully, and as they are so far gone, the best thing you can do is to cremate them, root and branch, on a good hot boiler fire, every last one of them. I would not want any stock from plants in the condition you describe. Then I would clean out all the soil and spread it out on the ground outdoors, in a thin layer, so that the frost would have a good chance at it all. Then if the house is devoted to violets alone, I would give it one or two good sulphur fumigations, a few days apart, then sweeten up the benches, soil under benches, etc., with a good heavy coating of hot, freshly slaked lime. Then it will be in good shape to be useful for spring stock of any kind; and I never saw any one with room enough at this time of the year.

R. E. S.

TOO HIGH TEMPERATURE.

Will you please inform me what effect too much lime has on Marie Louise violets? Ours produce flowers light in color. A large amount of lime was worked into the soil. We keep the temperature at 46 degrees at night and 58 degrees in daytime and from 60 to 65 degrees on bright days, with plenty of air.

J. N. A.

I do not think that the light color of your violets comes from the lime in the soil, but should more likely think that it was a lack of enough and proper manure in the soil when making up the borders. Have you had aphis on them? They will weaken the plants so that the flowers will come light and spotted. Again, you are keeping them a little too warm, as Marie Louise likes a night temperature of 40 to 45 degrees and a day temperature of, say, 55 or 60 degrees. And it is not well to have it go above 60 degrees if it is possible to keep it down by ventilation and shutting off the heat in the pipes. I think you will have better luck by running cooler. R. E. S.

GOOD PLACE FOR VIOLETS.

We would like to ask you for suggestions as to keeping a succession of stock in greenhouses throughout the year, if practicable. We are in the nursery business and have two propagating houses, 10x100, and six other houses, on hot water boilers, that can be run 50 degrees to 55 degrees. We are near Buffalo and have two other cities of 50,000 and 200,000 for markets. We propagate roses, plants sufficient for our nursery business, say 40,000 by summer propagation, also ampelopsis and clematis. What would you suggest as practicable to fill in the summer months and autumn? We have considered carnations, chrysanthemums, violets and lilies of the valley. Is there anything better? D. M.

Lily of the valley cannot be successfully forced unless a brisk bottom heat and minimum winter atmospheric temperature of 70 or 75 degrees is at command. Not knowing the dimensions of the six other houses named, it is difficult to advise what to grow. If they are of about similar width to the two whose length and breadth are given, violets would be more suitable than either carnations or chrysanthemums. We think it would be better to grow one particular flower than a variety. Violets do not need over 45 degrees at night in winter. If it is decided to grow doubles they could be lifted from the field about the end of August. In the case of singles, of which Princess of Wales is the best sort, the plants should be left out until they have had a few degrees of frost. If lifted before they are frozen they will make leaf growth at the expense of flowers.

We do not know the requirements of the several city markets named, but would suggest violets as the likeliest crop. The singles will have finished flowering at the end of March and the doubles a month later, when the regular propagation of roses, etc., could be done. C. W.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—A new $2,000 greenhouse is to be built in Wheeler park, and henceforth the city will grow its own plants.

CARNATIONS

SOME CHICAGO SEEDLINGS.

Illustrated in this issue are several Chicago seedling carnations, at least two of which are confidently expected to become widely disseminated in the trade. It appears that red is the favorite color of the experimenters whose principal occupation is growing cut flowers for the Chicago market. Bassett & Washburn, at Hinsdale, have raised a considerable number of seedlings, nearly all of them red. The one illustrated is that known as No. 20, which was awarded the American Carnation Society's bronze medal over more than a dozen competitors at the Toronto convention. No. 20 is a cross of Prosperity and Crane. It has Prosperity size and the flower has full petalage, giving an excellent form of bloom. The edges are serrated. Practically every grower at Toronto commented on the commercial possibilities of this variety, it being accorded a reception equal to Mr. Washburn's fondest anticipations, which is saying quite a little. Stock is being worked up on this variety and it is expected to bench 25,000 plants for next season. It will be the first time Bassett & Washburn have undertaken the exploitation of a new carnation. They intend to exhibit it largely next year and will in the meantime select one of those catchy and appropriate names which are a large assistance in the distribution of any new plant.

At Mt. Greenwod W. N. Rudd is growing practically nothing but seedlings originating on the place. The pet of the family is No. 28103A. We do not vouch for the continuity of the numerals applied to the seedlings originating here, but it is apparent that it was some time since series A was entered upon. This is a deep flesh pink, a cross between two unnamed seedlings. It has the blood of Daybreak, Scott, Mrs. McBurney and Mayor Pingree. It first flowered in 1903. He must indeed be of sanguine temperament who thinks he has a successor to Enchantress. But Mr. Rudd is of opinion, and it is worth while noting that he was one of the first to comment on the decadence of Lawson, that Enchantress has seen its best days. He has great expectations for No. 28103A and is working up stock of it to plant in quantity next season. The flowers have been on the Chicago market through E. F. Winterson Co. this season and have sold at a better price than Enchantress. The flower is large, the form excellent, the stem strong and of good length.

Wietor Bros. have been growing seedlings, for pure interest in the work. They do not contemplate introducing anything now on the place, but have a number of good ones, several of which will be planted in considerable quantity next season. It is worth while noting that practically all their seedlings are red, although they also have a good white. The preponderance of red would indicate a strong desire for something better than existing varieties of this color, but their seedlings all antedate Victory and Robert Craig. The one illustrated is a flower of good size on a strong stem and with excellent calyx. The color is bright and the variety has excellent shipping quality.

Another Mr. Rudd hopes "will trot," to employ a characteristic expression, is a scarlet designated as No. 16802A. It is a seedling of Estelle on another seedling produced by many crosses. There is Argyle, Mrs. McBurney and Maceo blood in it. It first flowered in 1902 and has given excellent results thus far. Mr. Rudd is growing it in considerable quantity this year. Ed Winterson thinks highly of it.

No. 18103A is nearly a pure rose pink and a beautiful thing when it comes right, but Mr. Rudd says he is afraid it is too uncertain to grow in quantity. It first flowered in 1903, a cross of Dorothy Whitney on a seedling. The first cross, in 1896, was Daybreak x Wm. Scott. It also has the blood of Mrs. McBurney and Cerise Queen, the latter at one time having been Mr. Rudd's most prized pink variety.

All these seedlings probably will be shown at the meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club tonight, Thursday, February 14.

MR. STROUD'S OPINIONS.

[The views of Edward A. Stroud, Overbrook, Pa., as expressed before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, February 5, 1907.]

Our worthy president, Mr. Pennock, William P. Craig, Mr. Beattie, my foreman, and myself left the Reading terminal at 6:30 Tuesday evening, expecting to arrive in Toronto for the Carnation Society's convention at 10:30 next morning, but the train was delayed, not reaching its destination until 1 p. m., so that we had barely time to get to the hall and stage the few flowers I had sent before the opening of the convention. I will not attempt to go into the detail of the proceedings, or of the prizes awarded. What the members want to know, I think, is my opinion of the varieties shown, and their respective merits.

I am more than ever convinced that a line must be drawn between what may be termed the exhibition and the commercial carnation, just as we class our chrysanthemums. I want to impress members with the fact that the prize awards are very misleading. The question of how many flowers per square foot, and how these flowers are cut through the various months of the year, are facts which can be gained only through experience.

I will take the carnations in their colors starting with the white section.

Whites.

Alma Ward stood out prominently. It certainly is an exquisite flower and has improved considerably since shown at Boston. It is particularly adapted to the New York market, where it can command the price of which it is worthy. I suppose you noticed that this variety was awarded the silver medal; the gold medal was withheld because the judges did not consider any variety up to the standard required by a gold medal, and I might add that, taking all the exhibits, none was at its best, owing doubtless to the unfavorable weather all over the country the week previous.

White Perfection, well spoken of by many, is a fine, large flower, a good, clean white and an improvement over Lady Bountiful except in stem. I have some doubts as to its keeping qualities.

White Lawson comes such a poor color and so short-stemmed early in the season that it is not just all that is desired. The whites were poorly represented. I do not recall a vase of Lady Bountiful, which was so prominent at the Boston show. The general impression among the trade is that it lacks petalage, is neither early enough, nor free enough. There is a great opening for a new white and I wish some one would originate one to fill the bill.

A new white called Georgia looks as though it mignt be a good thing commercially. It does not have the size of White Perfection, but has a better stem and, I should judge, is a free bloomer.

The Reds.

Robert Craig still holds first honors, according to the judges. It is no doubt a fine red, and where a fancy price can be obtained, it would be profitable to grow.

Beacon was well represented by Mr. Fisher, Cottage Gardens, and the Strafford Flower Farm. We think well of Beacon. The habit of the plant is similar to Enchantress and shows excellent breeding. It is free, healthy and of good size as to flower. I have heard some criticism as to its color. Personally I see no objection to it, as my experience with red carnations has proven that the orange-reds are better keepers and shippers and without the habit of bruising, as do Cardinal, Adonis and Flamingo. I am satisfied with Beacon and expect to grow a quantity next year.

Victory was not shown extensively. It has the same good qualities as Beacon in regard to its keeping qualities and color. If it has any faults it may be considered a trifle weak in stem and form of flower.

A new red of merit was a seedling from Bassett & Washburn. As I saw it on the table it looked like a good commercial variety.

Red Chief, exhibited by F. Dorner &

Sons Co., while a good color, showed a weakness of stem which made it undesirable to me. This fault, I understand, was owing to the climatic conditions. I was informed that Lady Bountiful, when first shown as a seedling, looked much the same way.

Mr. Haines' red has done poorly at Strafford. If I could grow it the way Mr. Haines does it would be fine, but, unfortunately, I have not yet been able to do so; it does not feel at home at Strafford, and the difficulty looks to me like a question of soil. I saw it doing beautifully at Mr. Wiedener's place at Elkins Park.

In Pink.

In the class designated as the Scott shade of pink, Winsor was shown by the F. R. Pierson Co., in quantity and it certainly appeals to me. It is what is wanted in color and, while it may be slightly undersized, and may be a little short in stem, its freedom and color offset, to my mind, anything that may be said against it.

Winsome was one I did not examine closely. It seemed a pleasing shade and one that would be desirable. Dailledouze Bros. exhibited a pink sport of Lawson.

The cerise class, or Lawson shade of pink, was better represented than any other class. The great objection, it seemed to me, was the bluish cast most of them had. Two, the colors of which pleased me, were Afterglow and Mr. Weber's new seedling, Mabelle. Both of these arrived too late to be judged. Aristocrat is a fine, large flower. Its color did not strike me favorably. Perhaps I am too critical.

Dailledouze Bros.' new seedling, No. 348, which won the bronze medal, is a large, fine flower, but, again, I did not admire the color.

Mrs. C. W. Ward was attractive. I understand Mr. Ward thinks so much of it that it is not to be put on the market.

Elsa Struss did not show as well as at Boston.

Helen Goddard looked good commercially.

Pink Imperial showed good flowers and probably the longest stems in the show.

Variegated.

In the variegated section was Helen Gould, a sport of Enchantress. As a novelty it will make a place for itself.

Toreador, by Weber & Sons Co., an improved Prosperity, has good form and much better stem.

Bayside, or seedling No. 9, by A. Roper, is a much improved Mrs. M. A. Patten, and if a free bloomer should be a good thing.

Patten still holds its own.

Imperial attracted attention by its magnincent stems. It is a novelty pure and simple.

Other Varieties.

In the class for Enchantress shade of pink, Enchantress itself, so generally well known, hardly needs description. There is nothing to displace it. One competitor, by Baur & Smith, called May, was a better color but undersized.

Some seedlings exhibited by F. Dorner & Sons Co. are worthy of mention. One, a scarlet, No. 305, I think will be heard from, also seedling No. 97-03, a maroon shade, attracted my attention.

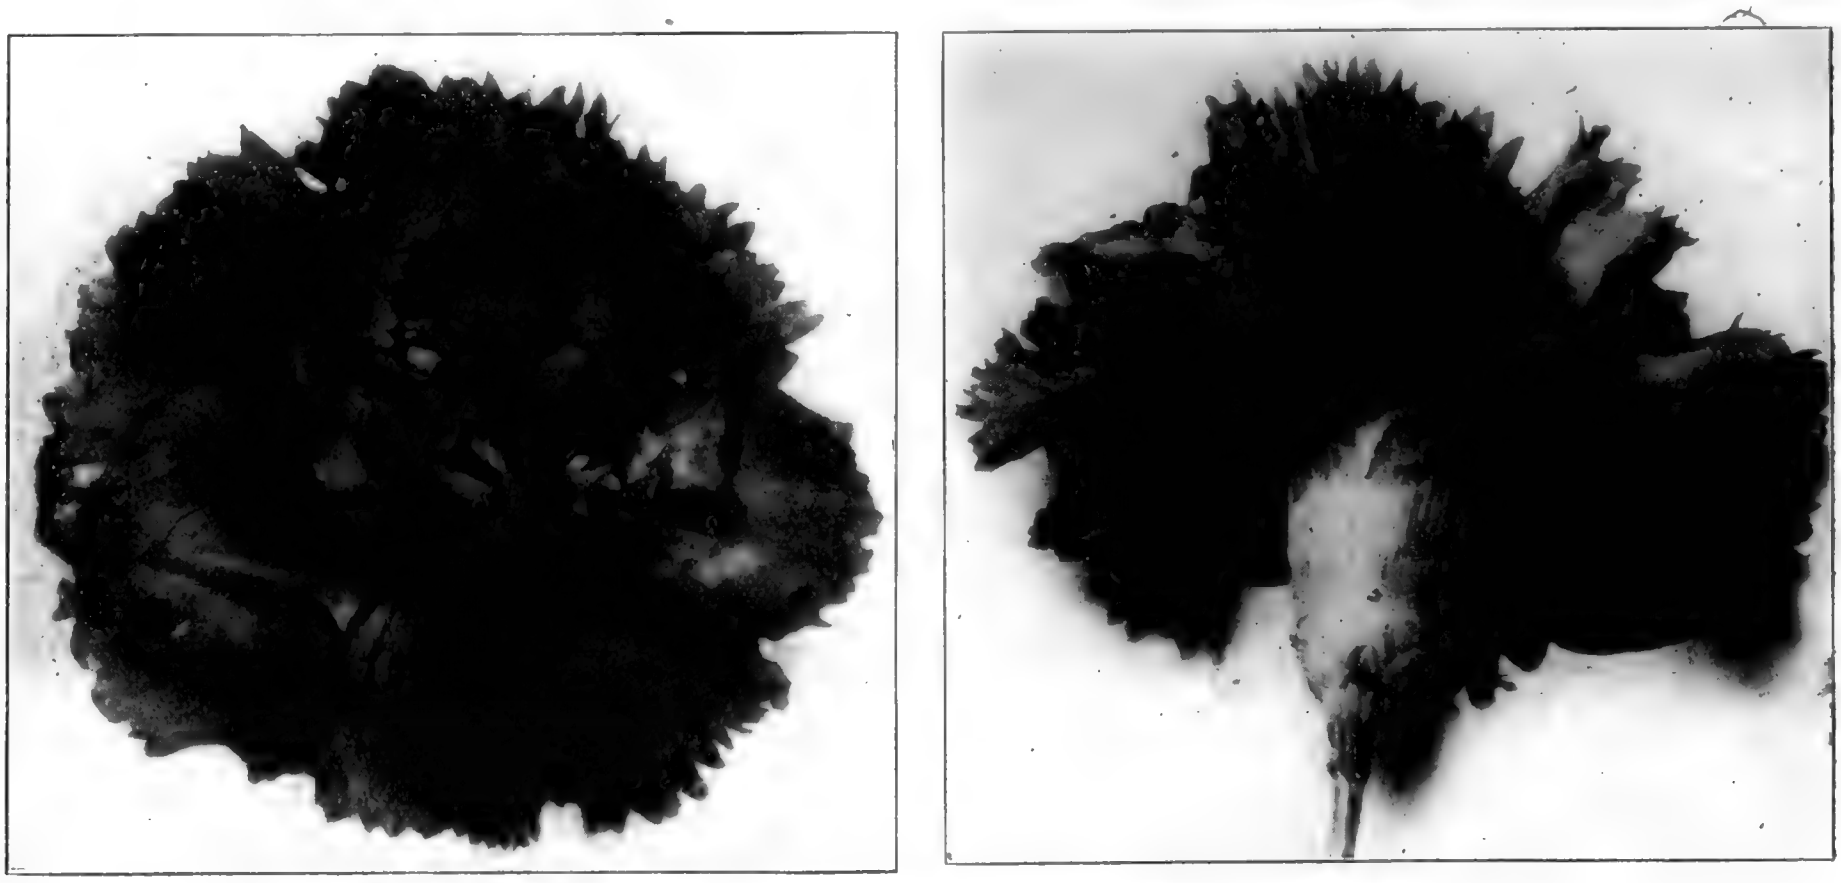
I hope my remarks will be taken in the spirit they are meant. I have tried to give my opinion as the flowers appeared to me personally, and I trust no one will be misled by them. Next year, when we meet at Washington, I hope we will have a large delegation from Philadelphia.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

The Second Batch of Cuttings.

If you were unable to get as many cuttings in the first batch as you will need for next season's stock, it is not too late to put in another batch of cuttings that will make the finest kind of plants by planting time. The cuttings you take now will be stronger than the earlier ones, and for that reason some growers prefer February cuttings to any other.

During the last two months the weather has been favorable to the rooting of carnation cuttings, but now the sun is getting stronger and we are apt to see more of it and you will have to exercise more care against wilting than heretofore. On bright days the ventilators will be raised several inches and you must guard against strong draughts, which are as deadly as the hot sunshine to the cuttings.



Fresh Sand Advisable.

There also comes the question of using the sand for more than one batch of cuttings. As a general proposition I do not favor using the sand for more than one batch. If the cuttings all rooted and were taken out before the roots attained any considerable length, then we sometimes leave an inch or so on the bottom for a second batch of cuttings, but never for a third batch. If a batch rooted poorly, or if a few of them damped off, then we take out all the sand.

The sand is the cheapest thing used in propagating and the danger from fungus, etc., is too great to economize unwisely on that article. Sometimes, even if the strike was first-class, some of the roots are broken off in taking the cuttings from the sand and these rot in a short time and contaminate the sand, causing fungus, etc. If you will stop to consider the cost of the sand and the value of the cuttings you expose to the dangers in the use of old sand you would not hesitate to renew it for every batch. Even when figuring the value of your cheapest cuttings the cost of the sand will be little more than one per cent of the value of the cuttings. Does not that make it seem foolish to use old sand? And that is not all. When you put in a batch of cuttings for your own use you depend on them for your next season's stock. If you don't get them rooted you are worse off than if you had not tried to root any. And if you take out a lot of poorly rooted stuff and worry along with them, you will likely have a poor lot of plants to house for next season. So I say, don't risk dollars to save pennies.

Topping Young Plants.

Some of those young plants you potted some weeks ago may need to be topped in the near future. Do not put off topping the most forward ones until all the plants are ready to top, but look them over once each week and top what need it and leave what do not need it. These last few words are as important as the first.

Occasionally you will see a man topping carnations and when he comes to a small one he will pull out only the very tip, thinking that he is taking out just about what he would take off later if he left the plant untouched. If he did what he thought, it would be bad enough, but in most cases what really happens is worse. A few weeks after he has taken the tops out in this manner, he finds that what he really did was merely to pull off four or six young leaves close to the stem and the tip proceeds to grow upward and has to be topped properly when the stem begins to lengthen. This sort of thing merely injures the plant and does not serve the purpose intended. The time to top a young plant is when it begins to run up toward the formation of a bud. When you can see the stem between the joints, then count as many joints as you may want to leave and take off all above that point. Top all the plants of the same variety as nearly alike as you can, as that will help greatly in making uniform plants.

When topping the young plants keep a sharp lookout for spot diseases, rust, etc. Pick off all diseased leaves and burn them. A. F. J. BAUR.

FOR SIMILAR TREATMENT.

Kindly let me know what varieties of carnations would be best suited to plant in the same house. I want some each of white, pink, red and a few variegated, also a few of the Daybreak color. What would be the best temperature for a house containing the above mentioned kinds. S. H. S.

Any of the following varieties will do well in a house that is run at 50 to 52 degrees at night, 6 degrees warmer on cloudy days and 15 degrees warmer on bright, sunny days: Enchantress, Rose-pink Enchantress, Beatrice, Lady Bountiful, Vesper, The Queen, Indiana Market, White Perfection, Moonlight, Candace, Helen Goddard, Indianapolis, Victory, Robt. Craig, Flambeau, G. H. Crane, Harlowarden, H. Fenn, Crimson Glow, Cardinal, Mrs. Patten, Glendale, Dorothy Whitney. If your soil is rather light and you have good success with Mrs. Lawson, you can cover the list of colors pretty well with its sports. There are Mrs. T. W. Lawson, White Lawson, Variegated Lawson, Red Lawson and Melody, which is about the same shade as Enchantress. All these will, of course, do well in the same temperature, which should be 54 to 56 degrees.

A. F. J. B.

CARNATIONS ON SOLID BENCH.

Can carnations be grown as successfully on a solid bench, with six inches of cinders under the soil, as in a raised bench with bottom heat? W. E. D.

Most growers prefer to plant their carnations on shallow benches with gentle bottom heat. The solid benches do not admit of forcing the crop to the same extent as do the elevated benches. This is sometimes a great advantage when flowers are in demand at a good price. The crop is more tardy on the solid bed and late crops are seldom as profitable as early ones. L. C. C.

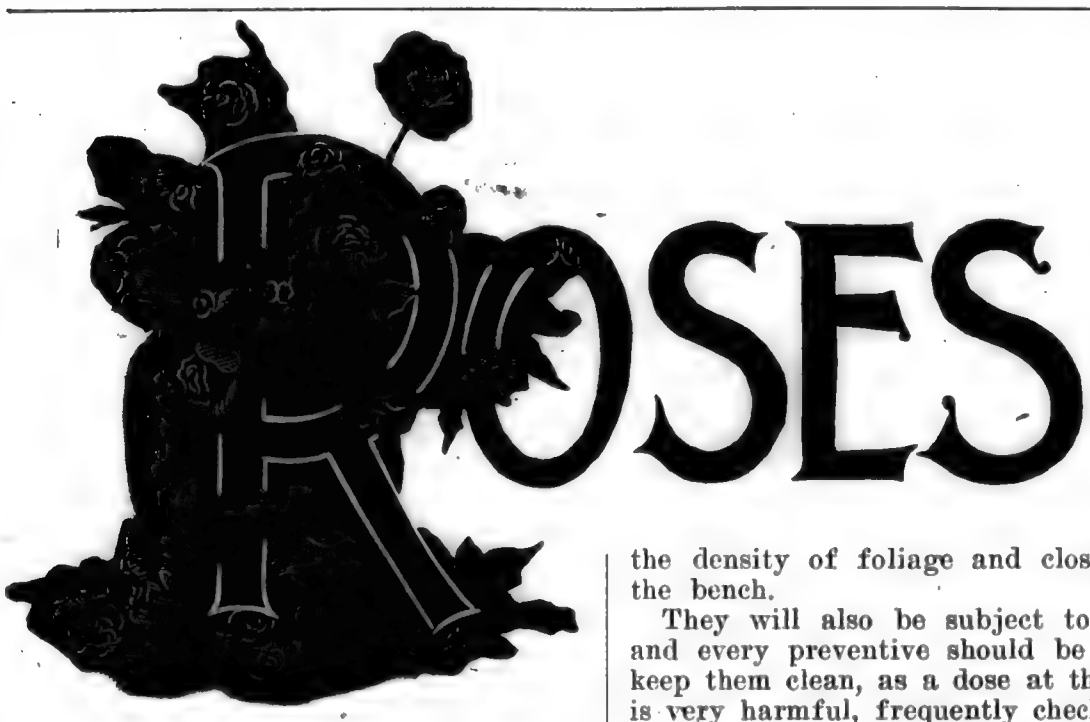
CARNATION WHITE PERFECTION

Please tell us who raised Carnation White Perfection and what is its parentage? It seems almost identical with a seedling I have flowered for the first time this year and which to me seems an excellent thing. My seedling is the result of a cross between White Lawson and Lady Bountiful, the latter the seed parent. The flower of my seedling may be slightly larger and higher built than White Perfection. Why do they recommend such a high temperature for this variety? Does it split? S. K.

White Perfection was raised by F. Dorner & Sons Co., Lafayette, Ind., and is a progression along the general line of white seedlings raised and disseminated by this firm, of which Lady Bountiful is one, so that it is not unlikely that other seedlings of Bountiful might possess some of the same characteristics. A temperature of from 54 to 56 degrees is recommended for White Perfection. It does not split its calyx more than other sorts. It is what nearly all growers consider the best white carnation on the market today.

LEAF-SPOT AGAIN.

Can you tell us what is the matter with our carnations? We have several varieties affected, as inclosed sample, but the Boston Market is the worst. They are affected in batches of fifty to 100 plants, while the adjoining plants are perfectly healthy. We have tried them on the dry side and with plenty of water, but they do not seem to outgrow it. Would too much wood ashes in the soil have that effect? A. E. L.



The specimen you forwarded is badly affected with the common leaf-spot, or Septoria Dianthi. This is not caused by too much wood ashes, at least not directly. Too much food in the soil might cause the plants to grow soft and more liable to contract the disease.

This disease is usually brought on by a lack of ventilation, or fire heat. During the last six weeks the complaint against continual cloudy weather has been general throughout the country and it has caused all kinds of disease and weakness among greenhouse stock. Instead of having sunshine every few days and steady firing at night, it has been warm and murky, just the conditions required by the fungus diseases to become active. The temptation to economize in fuel has caused many growers to keep the ventilators down and let the steam go down when it was not absolutely necessary to have steam up to keep the temperature up to the mark. Perhaps you made the same mistake. It is surprising how quickly the atmosphere becomes damp and foul and unfit for plants to grow in.

During such weather you should keep up fire heat and if necessary keep the ventilators open an inch or two. Not only does this let out the excessive heat, but it causes a circulation of air which in turn dries out the atmosphere in the house. Changing the air in the house is as necessary as watering the soil, and you should make it a practice to raise the ventilators an inch or two for a little while every day. If it is cold outdoors, you need not raise them much, in fact you should not be able to feel any cold draught. A very small crack will change the atmosphere in an hour, and the colder it is outside the quicker will be the change. Oftentimes during prolonged cold spells some growers will not open the ventilators for a week or more. This is a mistake which brings on spot diseases and causes the stock to grow soft much quicker than if fresh air had been supplied every day. Then, also, you should use such precautions as painting a steam pipe with sulphur and lime and water, or dusting the plants with the same mixture in dry form or grape dust. If your houses are inclined to be damp, you should throw slaked lime around under the benches and in corners, etc. Running the roots on the dry side will do little or no good if the atmosphere is damp and musty. Pick off all the affected leaves and burn them. Then if you will follow the above suggestions, and with the aid of the sunshine we are likely to have now, your plants should grow out clean again.

A. F. J. B.

REPOTTING.

As soon as the pots are filled with roots and the young plants have completed their first growth, they ought to be repotted without delay, so as to avoid any check. If this operation is neglected the plants become stunted and hard and require a long time to regain their vigor. Half-inch shifts, although entailing more care and labor, are preferable to shifts of one inch, as the growth is of a firmer texture and the plant more stocky. The usual rose soil passed through a ½-inch screen without any additional fertilizer is rich enough to carry them on until they require another shift.

Pot firmly and keep the ball about in the same position in the new pot as it occupied in the old. Water thoroughly until the whole of the soil in the pot is uniformly moist. As there is always more or less draught in the potting-shed, the plants should not be allowed to sit around any longer than necessary, but should be removed to the house they are to occupy. In order to give these young plants a fair show they should be placed on a bench with a full exposure to the sun where there is plenty of ventilation without draught.

They will now require persistent and careful attention in regard to watering and syringing, particularly syringing; as, if spider once gets a lodgment, it is very difficult to get rid of it, owing to the density of foliage and closeness to the bench.

They will also be subject to mildew and every preventive should be used to keep them clean, as a dose at this stage is very harmful, frequently checking the plants to such an extent that they are practically ruined. The best preventive is to be careful in ventilating. By this I mean to give the plants all the air possible, consistent with safety, keeping a steady temperature night and day and avoiding all sudden fluctuations and draughts.

For safety, a dusting of sulphur once a week should be applied, selecting a bright, warm day for the operation and allowing it to remain on the leaves for at least twenty-four hours before using the syringe.

At a temperature of 56 degrees nights and from 60 degrees to 75 degrees during the day, the plants will make wood of a good texture and form good eyes for a future growth. Ribes.

THE HYBRIDIZATION OF ROSES.

[A paper by John Cook, of Baltimore, Md., read before the Washington Florists' Club, February 5, by Charles McCauley.]

The longer I study and work in the line of hybridizing, the more I find there is no ending in the mysterious working of nature. Hybridizing has been carried on by botanists for nearly 200 years, but more for scientific knowledge than for the floricultural improvement of flowers, in particular the rose.

The First Hybrids.

The first hybrid tea roses were raised by Mr. Bennet, of England, and then rapidly followed up by German and French rose growers. The first hybrid tea rose in this country, namely, Souvenir de Wootton, was raised by the writer of this article about twenty years ago. It was the outcome of crossing Bon Silene with Louis Van Houtte. In attempting to recross this rose for several years I found it has a tendency to reproduce itself, and I abandoned it. Then came Marion Dingee, out of Caserta, a good, dark red rose for outdoor purposes, and Mrs. Robert Garrett, out of Sombreuill and Caroline Testout.

Commercial Seedlings.

Thousands of seedlings have been raised and some of them have produced extra fine flowers; but the habit in the way of growth and the production of the flowers for commercial purposes were such that it would not pay to grow them.

I found by recrossing some of those seedlings which have the least faults, we are more apt to get good roses for a commercial purpose. I have one now which has the good points for commercial winter work. It is the second generation of my white seedling, Madonna, and the Enchanter. It has a stronger growth than either of them, a stiff stem and large, pink flowers a shade lighter than the Enchanter. Another one, which is the outcome of one of my unnamed seedlings, with another unnamed one which had American Beauty blood on the male side, is now ten months old from the seed, and has produced during this winter five beautiful, shell pink flowers. The flowers are as large as the American Beauty, with three and four feet of stiff stems. The foliage is larger and handsomer than that of Beauty. The future will only tell how satisfactory this is going to prove. There are many other recrossed seedlings in sight, of which I will not speak now.

The trouble with most of our winter flowering standard varieties is, that the organs are, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, imperfect; namely, Bride, Bridesmaid, and Golden Gate. In red we have good material to work on, such as Richmond, Cardinal and Liberty. The best in pink is Caroline Testout. Marie Van Houtte, with its strong, healthy growth, makes a good seed bearer, as does also Etoil de France. As this rose proved to be too double, I thought of using the pollen for a less double rose. I chose Richmond. The result was that two seedlings came up and bloomed for the first time a month ago. One of them was perfectly single, with a more rapid growth than the Richmond, and the other one was as double as Etoil de France. I have several seedlings where the pollen was taken from three and four different varieties mixed together, and they are of the richest color in red of any I have ever raised.

Hints on Pollination.

In most cases, if you cross a white variety with a pink one the seedling will be lighter than the parent pink; and if you cross a pink rose with a red one, it will be darker.

For the seed bearer I would use the strongest grower and for the pollen bearer the best color. It takes four or five months for the seed to ripen. When perfectly ripe bruise the hepe, or seed ball, and put it in sand; it will soon rot. Then you can wash the seed out and sow it at once. It will take from three to ten months for some to come up. You will find that not near so many will come up as you have sown. The reason of this is, a great many of the pistils are twisted; consequently the pollen cannot be carried down to the ovule.

I always take a little pollen of the seed bearer in order to get as much of its habit as possible, as the pollen parent sometimes dominates over the seed bearer and you lose exactly what you have been trying to preserve, a strong growing habit.

Under glass I fertilize any time, summer or winter. For outdoors in summer you have to do this early, as the pollen on a hot day towards noon gets hard and is then worthless. If the pistils have a watery appearance, then is the time to apply the pollen. If the flower which you wish to fertilize is not quite ready to receive the pollen, you can cut the flower, which you wish to pollenize with, put it in a tumbler of water in a cool, shady place and it will keep for two or three days.

Work With Other Plants.

Martner, of Germany, was the first to give the florists some really good things in the way of azaleas. The first crossing of tuberous-rooted begonias was made by Zeith & Sons, of London, in 1869. Much has been written lately about the pollenization of the pear. My first attempt in this line was about fifteen years ago. I crossed the Duchess with the Seckel, and the Kieffer with the Seckel, and carefully pollenized them for two days in succession. As the flowers appear in clusters, I pollenized every one on one cluster. In a few days I examined them and found that half of them were dropping off. I had noticed at the beginning that some of the stems that carry the flowers were of a much paler green than others. By close examination and dissecting I found it was the fault of the stem that supplies the flower with nourishment and no amount of pollen would set fruit. This only shows that the fault of not setting fruit is put on the wrong side. Plants are capable of forming the fleshy part, or the shell, case, or whatever you may call it, that surrounds the germ of the seed without any pollen.

I have a Cycas revoluta which every other year brings a crop of seed, not the fleshy part, and the shell that surrounds the little bulby part inside is always perfect. All it would need would be some pollen to fertilize it, as pollen is nothing more than living cells, and with these cells life begins.

My advice to young men is to begin early and study plant anatomy and physiology. Dissect the flowers and fruit, follow up the organs, see where they start from and where they go. Without this study we are working in a fog and by studying them we are able to gather a few pebbles on the shore of horticultural knowledge.

FOOD FOR TEAS.

How much manure should be put into sandy loam for Bride and Maid roses and how much bone meal? Should the beds be tamped before planting? Should they be watered with liquid manure when dry and with clear water between each of the manure waterings? How early should liquid manure be given them?

W. R. M.

It depends on the nature and richness of the soil and, without examining it, it is impossible to state the exact proportions of soil and manure required to make it suitable for roses. The quality of the manure must also be taken into consideration. The usual proportions are good, turfy loam four, decomposed cow manure one.

Tamping the soil in the benches is a rather ancient custom and not much practiced by up-to-date growers; but if the soil is of a very sandy nature the soil can be tamped firm after the plants are benched.

It is not a good plan to feed with liquid manure when the soil is dry, as the plants are apt to use too much at once and sicken themselves. When the soil is in a half dry condition is the best time to use it.

If the liquid feeding is of ordinary strength and the plants are robust there is no necessity for using clear water between liquid applications.

As to the proper time to commence feeding with liquid the grower must be guided by the condition of his plants and the original richness of his compost. Many good growers refrain from this practice until the days begin to lengthen in February.

Bone meal can be applied at almost any time with beneficial results. One bushel to each 500 superficial feet of surface is sufficient for each application. This should be lightly stirred in and can be repeated every six weeks with perfect safety. RIBES.

The Market.

While wintery conditions continue and we are enjoying zero temperature, with abundance of snow for sleighing, we have had rather more sunshine and flowers are more abundant. In the case of carnations, prices have fallen and a further decline in the near future is probable. The long dull spell in December and January must be held responsible for a lack of stem on many of the flowers.

Roses still sell at high prices, although a decline, due to increasing supplies, is noted as compared with the previous week. Best Beauties and Richmonds still realize something like Christmas prices. Short-stemmed Brides and Maids are more abundant and lower.

Violets are plentiful and many are sold at 25 cents to 30 cents per hundred, which is not very remunerative. Best stock, however, still realizes 50 cents to 75 cents. Sweet peas continue to sell well. Easter lilies are rather scarce and make $2 a dozen.

There is a much larger quantity of bulbous stock arriving, but the bulk of it clears satisfactorily. La Reine continues the dominant tulip, while Trumpet Major, Golden Spur and double Von Sion are daffodils most in evidence. Some fine Lilium speciosum album and rubrum are coming in and meet with a good sale. No special change in ferns or asparagus, but smilax is making better prices than usual.

Southerland Suicides.

George Southerland, wholesale commission florist at 34 Hawley street, on Monday, February 11, was found asphyxiated by gas supposed to have been turned on by his own hand with suicidal intent. The interment was Wednesday afternoon.

George A. Southerland was formerly a partner of W. J. Stewart in the commission business. Later he was associated with a man named Peck. After a number of vicissitudes the business recently was reorganized as the Southerland Co., a Mr. Burke being associated.

Various Notes.

John W. Duncan, of the Boston park department, delivered an interesting lecture on "The Home Vegetable Garden," at Horticultural hall, February 9. The audience was the largest of the season and the numerous questions asked showed the keen interest taken in the subject.

At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society February 9 Walter C. Bayliss was elected a member of the board in place of the late George F. Fabyan. A committee was appointed to arrange for the decorating of the walls and ceiling of the lecture hall and to improve its acoustic properties.

Florists and market gardeners operating steam boilers are up in arms against proposed steam boiler legislation, which if enacted will make it compulsory for all such to employ only licensed firemen. At the next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, February 19, all those operating steam boilers are asked to meet the executive committee at Horticultural hall at 6 o'clock to decide upon what action the club will take in the matter. Every commercial grower, whether belonging to the club or not, is invited to be present.

At the coming club meeting, in addition to Mr. Ross's lecture, there will be some interesting exhibits, the steam boiler question will be thoroughly aired and everything points to a rousing attendance.

E. Sutermeister, of Readville, is bringing in large quantities of Golden Spur and Von Sion narcissi and other bulbous stock of his usual high standard of quality at present.

A delegation from the Gardeners' and Florists' Club will attend the annual banquet of the North Shore Horticultural Society February 15. W. N. CRAIG.

LONDON, ONT.—A. John Mill has gone out of business.

FENTON, MICH.—George Bridson is spending about $2,000 in improving and enlarging his greenhouses.

AN importer at Philadelphia, Alex. Murphy & Co., protested at the duty assessed on cycas stems, claiming they were to be admitted free as palm leaves in their natural state, but the Board of General Appraisers reaffirmed the old classification as nursery stock and the usual rate of duty.

BEFORE ordering stock for import, consult the REVIEW's page for European advertisers.

THE imports of window glass for the week ending February 2 were 3,252 boxes of 100 feet, valued at $21,104.

THE National Council of Horticulture, to make its press service attractive to editors, does not send the same articles for publication to competing papers.

AT Boston a city ordinance is proposed which will make greenhouse owners liable to arrest and fine if they employ any other than licensed firemen.

HERETOFORE young stock of carnations has all gone in one direction, from America to Europe, but now there will be reciprocal relations; all the growers here will want to try Britannia, the scarlet that eclipsed Victory and Robert Craig at London.

THE east had heavy snow and cold weather the first of this week, but all the rest of the country has much improved growing conditions, including bright skies. In the Mississippi valley it was springlike February 13, while it was 10 degrees below zero at Boston.

GLADIOLUS AMERICA.

Referring to Mr. Childs' article, page 862, of the REVIEW for February 7, I beg to state that the facts of the case were discussed between us in correspondence before I prepared my address to the American Breeders' Association last month, and as Mr. Childs was unable to meet my statement of facts, he discontinued the correspondence.

Although he could not meet my proof at that time, he evidently did not believe me, for he now says that he withdrew owing to my absurd contentions at that time. He now repeats his views in the REVIEW, and its readers will be able to distinguish where the absurdity lies.

As the corms of America (as such) were first offered last season, that was my first opportunity to see the bloom, as I never leave home at that season of the year. I recognized it as my No. 119, which I had grown and sold in collections for years, and which, according to my practice, for purposes of observation, I grow a few corms under number. Purchasers of my collections also wrote voluntarily that they, too, had first received it in my stock.

My reasons for not introducing America under name have been public property for years, and it is well known that I have never sold any of my hybrids in this way alone. I am an originator, not a grower, and my practice has always been to select, if at all, in collections of a certain standard, and that containing America contains hundreds of others equally desirable. Hence the popularity of my introductions. I also sold some of the original seedlings as such.

As Mr. Childs has indicated the limit of his knowledge of the extent and character of my work, I beg to confirm his statement, as I also wrote him that it is exceedingly small.

In reply to his statement that America is largely of Childsi blood, I challenge him to prove this by a single characteristic, assuming that he refers to the reputed parentage of Gandavensis x Saundersii, which should bear the name of Prof. Max Leitchlin, and not the aggregation of purchase now masquerading under the present title as a distinct strain.

The statement as to my remarks on the maturing habit of the cormels is sufficient to stultify the writer of the whole article, as I never said anything of the kind, but this is on a par with his ignoring other facts submitted by me in direct correspondence.

Immediately after digging the corms and applying the last possible test of comparison, I advised Mr. Childs of the result; therefore there was no delay in advancing my claims, as he has stated, but these are facts that he considers absurd. To some truth is always absurd, but the intelligent public can distinguish wheat from tares.

H. H. GROFF.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Albert Heinl.

Albert Heinl, secretary of the Webb Banking Co., Peoria, Ill., died January 28, after an attack of the grip followed by congestion of the brain. He was the son of Joseph Heinl, of the firm of Heinl & Sons, Jacksonville, Ill., but Albert did not engage in business with his father and brothers. He followed the jewelry business for a number of years, but about two years ago entered the employ of the Webb Banking Co. Being a member of the Knights Templars and the Mystic Shriners, the burial was conducted by the Masonic fraternity.

ILLINOIS ASSOCIATION.

The second annual meeting of the Illinois State Florists' Association will be held at Bloomington, Ill., February 19 and 20. The following is the program:

February 19—Afternoon Session.
Report of the Secretary.
President's address.
Business of the association.
Evening Session.
Banquet given by the Bloomington Florists' Club.

February 20—Morning Session.
A paper, "The Florists and the Experiment Station," by A. C. Beal, Instructor in Floriculture, University of Illinois.
A paper, "Carnations at the Toronto Show," by W. N. Rudd, President Mt. Greenwood Cemetery Association.
A paper, "Effect of Light and Shade on Plants," by H. Hasselbring, University of Chicago.
A paper, "The Development of Floriculture in Illinois," by J. C. Blair, Professor of Horticulture, University of Illinois.
Election of officers.

The meeting promises to be a grand success, and it will be worth the while of every florist in the state to attend. Besides the regular speakers, it is expected men of prominence in the profession outside of the state will attend and help to make the discussions lively. The officers are: President, J. F. Ammann, Edwardsville, Ill.; secretary, H. Hasselbring, Chicago, Ill.; treasurer, Geo. A. Kuhl, Pekin, Ill.

The following are the hotels of Bloomington with their rates, American plan:

Illinois hotel, rates	$2.50 to $3.00	per day
Hills house, rates	2.00 to 2.50	per day
Folsome hotel, rates	1.25	per day
Clifton house, rates	1.00 to 1.25	per day
Arnold hotel, rates	1.25	per day

The Illinois hotel will be headquarters. Any one wishing rooms engaged will be provided for if he writes to F. L. Washburn, Bloomington, Ill. There is every prospect of a large attendance and an excellent exhibition, the best ever seen in the state outside of Chicago. The committee invites every florist to come and bring his competitor.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The out-of-town demand has increased materially since last report. Detroit is an especially good buyer. It appears that everywhere through the wide territory served from the Chicago market there is a pronounced shortage of stock. This is especially true of roses. Carnations are in less demand, and of bulbous stock there seems to be plenty in every country town. The probability is that the demand for carnations will increase as prices recede. Local trade also is good and practically every wholesaler subscribes to the report of one of the best week's business so far this season.

Several days of bright, cold weather have had a decidedly beneficial effect on the quality of stock. There can be no complaint at the quality of roses, but on the score of quantity nothing new can yet be said. A number of growers report fine crops not far away and the receipts throughout the market show some increase. Prices hold their own and it will require much more stock than we have had at any time since Christmas to put quotations back to the normal level for this season. There has not been a day in two months when all rose orders were filled.

Receipts of carnations are much heavier than they were a week ago. Some houses report crops to be double what they were a week ago. There was a steady weakening following the turn of last week and it is predicted that the latter part of this week will see prices lower than they have been at any time since Christmas. In fact, there are now more pink than can be moved at quoted rates and clean-up sales are in order. The quality generally is excellent, although with some growers Lawson is poor and with many stems are not so strong as usual. There is some complaint as to shipping quality, but this will pass with a few more days of crisp weather.

There are large receipts of violets for St. Valentine's day, but a large part are already sold on advance orders, which were more numerous than has ever been known before. The result is that the price holds fairly steady. There are some splendid singles in addition to the doubles from New York.

Within a week receipts of bulbous stock have increased materially. Daffodils rather hang fire and it is always possible to pick up considerable quantities of tulips, many of them of fine quality. There are plenty of callas but not many Easter lilies.

Green goods are in better supply than a week ago.

Gas Ruins Stock.

John Lang, at Melrose and Robey streets, has met with a severe loss which he attributes to a leak in the gas main in the street. He has a range of seven houses, four in carnations and three in bedding stock and miscellaneous plants. A week ago the carnation plants in the house nearest the street began to turn yellow and give every indication of the presence of gas, although there was no odor. One by one the other houses were affected, in spite of the fullest possible ventilation. Neighboring growers agreed with Mr. Lang that gas from the street, seeping in through the floors of the greenhouses because it could not escape through the frozen ground outside, was at the root of the trouble. As the loss seems likely to reach several thousands of dollars, Mr. Lang proposes to sue the gas company.

Will Drop Carnations.

George Reinberg has found so good a market for roses and has figured that space devoted to them pays so much better than space devoted to carnations, that he has concluded to confine his operations to roses next year. He is propagating some carnations for summer bloom and some for the rooted cutting trade, but unless he changes his mind will plant none in the houses next fall. This will give six additional large houses for American Beauty and three houses for teas. All the old houses on his place are to be taken down this spring and replaced with modern structures.

Honorable Mention.

It develops that a few weeks ago John G. Kruchten, of Kruchten & Johnson, became the father of a vigorous baby boy. He is none the less entitled to honorable mention because he saw fit to suppress news of the event.

Wild Lawsons.

A good many local growers are complaining of what they call "wild Lawsons" in their benches. These are plants of rank growth, said sometimes to reach a height of three feet or more, and so strong they rob the adjacent plants—but they never produce a flower.

The rooting out of these "wild" plants is said to account for the vacant spaces on many a bench. Some growers took fine cuttings from these robust plants before they appreciated their true character, thereby multiplying their troubles.

Added Side Lines.

Leonard Kill states that, pursuant to Peter Reinberg's new policy, he has just placed an order with Wm. Hagemann, New York, for 75,000 valley pips. They expect to grow asparagus and a number of other items next season. Mr. Kill says rose crops will be on heavily in a few days.

Various Notes.

J. A. Valentine, of Denver, was a visitor this week. Since the carnation convention at Toronto he has visited the principal eastern cities, particularly to investigate the Easter plant business. He says trade everywhere is on the increase and everyone prospering as never before.

In showing some long sweet peas to Miss McAdams, who is one of the most demure young ladies who visits the market, E. C. Amling offered them with the remark, "All you have to do is to tie on some ribbon and you are ready for the ceremony." "Indeed," said she, "it's the last thing I'd think of; in a wholesale house! Never!"

Percy Jones says that Sol Garland's cut of carnations has been running steadily a little above last year from the same amount of glass. Mr. Garland is to be congratulated, for last year's crop was good, and hardly another grower can say he has cut as many flowers this year as last. Mr. Garland visited the automobile show last week and bought a machine, promised for May delivery.

N. J. Wietor says that if Wietor Bros. make more money on the space given to any carnation than on Enchantress it is on White Cloud. Mr. Wietor says that while crops have been below normal for more than three months, the better prices realized have caused their gross sales to slightly exceed those of the same period last year.

The Florists' Club's carnation show takes place tonight, Thursday, February 14. There promises to be a good display of flowers. The discussion will interest the growers. P. J. Hauswirth will report on his eastern trip and several brief comments on the Toronto show will be forthcoming.

The meeting of the Illinois State Florists' Association at Bloomington, February 19 and 20, will attract quite a number from Chicago.

Former Retail Florist John C. Schubert, now city smoke inspector, is not finding his present pathway strewn with roses. The City Club has haled him before the Civil Service Commission on charges of incompetency and neglect of duty and he stands in imminent danger of permanent separation from a 2,000-dollar job.

Phil Schupp, manager of J. A. Budlong's city store, says they are more than pleased with the season to date. Their rose cut has been steady and prices excellent.

The annex to the Coliseum, where the cut blooms were staged at the last flower show, was destroyed by fire on the night of February 11. There was a hardware trade's exhibition at the time.

Joseph Ziska, of the Chicago Rose Co., who has been making wire work for upwards of thirty years, reports business as good as he has ever known. He is working his force twelve hours a day and Sundays. Recently competition in the wire making business has caused all manufacturers to pay time and a half for overtime.

Peter Reinberg was one of the reception committee to greet Carter Harrison on his return from California. He is devoting all his energies to securing Mr. Harrison's nomination for the mayoralty.

Robert Hand is again able to be about the greenhouses of Poehlmann Bros. Co., although he still uses crutches as a result of his being struck by a train some months ago.

W. L. Rock, Kansas City, sent to Kennicott Bros. Co. Monday for 1,000 of Klehm's Novelty tulip.

Washington's birthday, February 22, is a legal holiday and there will be but one delivery of mail. Orders should be telegraphed.

It is reported that because of irregularities in invoices some of the Dutch bulbs received at the Chicago custom house in August were only released from the appraiser's stores last week.

Ernst Weber, who has been growing carnations for a couple of years, will go back to roses next season.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. reports receiving $10 per dozen for its best Beauties in the last week. John Poehlmann says the buyers do not especially object to the price, although much above what it usually is at this season, for he says they appear to appreciate that growers are burning $4 worth of coal for every $1 worth of Beauties they have been cutting lately.

C. W. McKellar has had exceptionally bad luck in the matter of having orchid shipments frozen. Two more boxes were received frozen last Friday, making four, of an aggregate value of nearly $300, lost within a week. He turned the goods back to the express company and was both pleased and surprised that settlement was made within three days.

The A. L. Randall Co. reports that again this week they ran out of white lilac. The demand is the heaviest they ever have known.

There was a large display of flowers at the funeral of Capt. Gammar, of the New York Central lines, last week. Nearly everyone had a share of the work, but Fleischman, in the Railway Exchange building, was especially favored.

Bassett & Washburn expect to plant next season about 25,000 plants of their new red carnation, No. 20. They now have 15,000 cuttings of it in the sand.

E. Fransen, who looks after the selling end for Scheiden & Schoos, reports an excellent call for white carnations, but pink going a little slow in the last week.

Henry Klehm, of Klehm's Nurseries, Arlington Heights, Ill., has formed a partnership with Mrs. Frank Hurst, at Moline, and will open a flower and candy store there.

Adam Zender says he has a claim of about $350 for young stock supplied to M. Winandy the season before the failure. He neglected to prove up his claim in the bankruptcy court and was blaming himself for it until he saw in last week's REVIEW what the estate will realize.

H. F. Halle reports a rush of funeral orders.

Charles Fisk is not making any complaint of a lack of business.

Andrew Ivorick, one of E. H. Hunt's wire workers, died Sunday. In extending sympathy to the family the firm also should be included.

Sinner Bros. have joined with Vaughan & Sperry in the construction of adjoining private offices at the Flower Market. Frederick Sperry says he is more than pleased with the market for violets the last few weeks. In addition to large quantities of Hudson river stock they now are handling many singles.

George Darby, a well-known character in the market, made his reappearance Monday after spending six weeks in the County hospital. He was run over by a street car at the corner of Wabash and Randolph streets Christmas eve.

Weiland & Risch have gained additional space for their packing room, and a new entrance, through the changes in the basement of the Atlas block.

P. J. Hauswirth had the banquet which marked the merger of the Merchants' Club and the Commercial Club at the Auditorium last Saturday night. A large semi-circular table and several small round tables were decorated with Robert Craig carnations, which made a telling effect.

John Mangel reports business good and is turning out some handsome work. He is handling first-class stock and getting good prices for it.

The retail stores are full of well flowered azaleas.

delphia, was reinforced by the arrival of Paul Berkowitz.

The creditors of M. Winandy, up to the hour of going to press, had filed no protest against the sale of all the assets and equities to Arthur B. Dietsch for $4,500, as reported exclusively in last week's Review. No protest being filed at the close of court February 13, the sale will stand approved.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Pittsburg and vicinity passed through a blizzard last week. The coldest spots reported were Charleroi, 6 degrees below; Steubenville, 8 degrees below, and Cheswick, 20 degrees below; but the sun has managed to show itself occasionally. Stock is coming in a little more plentifully, but the prices are still high, especially on roses.

Trade has been good, the wholesalers managing to clean up every day. The retailers are still complaining about high prices hurting their business and fear that it will have the effect of scaring their customers off and that it will take some time to get them in the habit of buying after stock gets down to more reasonable prices.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club met Tuesday evening, February 5, and elected officers for the ensuing year. The secretary reports a membership of 159. During the year there were seven resignations and one death; eight were dropped for nonpayment of dues. However, during the year seventeen new members were added. The treasury showed a balance of $163.71 and all bills paid.

Carnations, the subject of the evening, was taken up. The Pittsburg Rose & Carnation Co. exhibited Flamingo; Fred Burki, Enchantress, Lawson, Haines, Lieut. Peary, Rose-pink Enchantress, White Perfection, White Lawson, Lady Bountiful, a pink seedling and a red seedling, all of which were good. John Wyland exhibited Lady Bountiful, Enchantress, Lawson and Rose-pink Enchantress. E. C. Ludwig showed a vase of carnations shipped from Michigan. Albert Lorch had a handsome vase of long-stemmed Lawson. The Pittsburg Florists' Exchange had several good exhibits, among them one which is Enchantress as far as appearance goes, except that it is said to be a better keeper. Mr. Jenkins showed a bunch of carnations grown right in the heart of the city which have not seen the sun for three months. F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y., sent Winsor and White Enchantress, both good, but Winsor was the favorite of the evening and the opinion of Fred Burki was that it is a good thing and just the variety and color which has been sought and badly needed.

After all had satisfied themselves discussing the various exhibits, Mr. Burki and Mr. Wyland, who had attended the Toronto convention, were called on for reports on the convention. Among other things they suggested that the club representatives be given power at the next convention to ask the Carnation Society to come to Pittsburg. This was taken up, considered at some length, and the result was a motion to take at once such steps as would result in bringing the Carnation Society to Pittsburg, if not in 1909, at least not later than 1910. This city has now many growers and a good membership in the Carnation Society, and besides being centrally located, has much to show the visiting members and could undoubtedly do as much as any city in the country to make the convention a success. At Washington next year you will hear from Pittsburg.

The Baur Floral Co., of Erie, Pa., sent samples of carnation clips; also the M. & D. artificial calyx was shown and examined by all the growers and their merits discussed. After a motion of a vote of thanks to the exhibitors, the meeting adjourned.

John E. Haines, of Bethlehem, Pa., sent an exhibit of Imperial and Pink Imperial which were fine. They came one day late for the show, but after being thawed out were exhibited by the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., for the balance of the week.

An argument as to the best time and method of planting carnations, by Fred Burki and John Wyland, was one of the features of the club meeting. This came about in discussing varieties and unconsciously they gave the best talk ever heard in the club on this subject, and the growers showed they were missing none of the points.

Various Notes.

E. J. Weaver, of Lancaster, Pa., was one of the visitors last week. He is a large shipper of mignonette and sweet peas to this market.

J. B. Murdoch & Co. say the demand for Beauties is exceptionally heavy.
